

Frontenac Edition

FRANCIS PARKMAN'S WORKS

VOLUME THIRTEEN

Frontenac Edition

NO. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000. 1000.

[France and England in North America
Part Seventh]

BY

FRANCIS PARKMAN

IN THREE VOLUMES

VOLUME THREE

BOSTON

LITTLE, BROWN, ~~AND COMPANY~~

1910

Copyright, 1884,
BY FRANCIS PARKMAN.

Copyright 1897,
BY LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY.

All rights reserved.

Printers
H. J. PARKHILL & CO BOSTON, U. S. A.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1758, 1759.

THE BRINK OF RUIN.

	PAGE
Jealousy of Vaudreuil — he asks for Montcalm's Recall, his Discomfiture — Scene at the Governor's House — Disgust of Montcalm — The Canadians Despondent — Devices to encourage them — Gasconade of the Governor. — Deploable State of the Colony — Mission of Bougainville — Duplicity of Vaudreuil — Bougainville at Versailles — Substantial Aid refused to Canada — A Matrimonial Treaty — Return of Bougainville — Montcalm abandoned by the Court, his Plans of Defence. — Sad News from Candiac. — Boasts of Vaudreuil	3

CHAPTER XXIV.

1758, 1759.

WOLFE.

The Exiles of Fort Cumberland. — Relief. — The Voyage to Louisbourg — The British Fleet. — Expedition against Quebec. — Early Life of Wolfe — his Character, his Letters to his Parents, his Domestic Qualities. — Appointed to command the Expedition. — Sails for America	21
---	----

CHAPTER XXV.

1759.

WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

PAGE

French Preparation. — Muster of Forces — Gasconade of Vaudreuil. — Plan of Defence — Strength of Montcalm. — Advance of Wolfe — British Sailors — Landing of the English — Difficulties before them. — Storm — Fireships. — Confidence of French Commanders — Wolfe occupies Point Levi — A Futile Night Attack — Quebec bombarded — Wolfe at the Montmorenci. — Skirmishes — Danger of the English Position — Effects of the Bombardment. — Desertion of Canadians — The English above Quebec — Severities of Wolfe — Another Attempt to burn the Fleet — Desperate Enterprise of Wolfe. — The Heights of Montmorenci. — Repulse of the English	36
--	----

CHAPTER XXVI.

1759.

AMHERST, NIAGARA.

Amherst on Lake George — Capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point — Delays of Amherst — Niagara Expedition. — La Corne attacks Oswego, his Repulse — Niagara besieged. — Ambray comes to its Relief. — Battle. — Rout of the French. — The Fort taken — Isle-aux-Noix — Amherst advances to attack it. — Storm. — The Enterprise abandoned — Rogers attacks St Francis, destroys the Town. — Sufferings of the Rangers	77
--	----

CHAPTER XXVII.

1759.

THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

Elation of the French. — Despondency of Wolfe — The Parishes laid waste — Operations above Quebec — Illness of Wolfe. — A New Plan of Attack — Faint Hope of Success. — Wolfe's Last Despatch. — Confidence of Vaudreuil. — Last Letters of
---	--

CONTENTS.

vii

	PAGE
Montcalm.—French Vigilance — British Squadron at Cap-Rouge — Last Orders of Wolfe — Embarkation. — Descent of the St Lawrence — The Heights scaled — The British Line — Last Night of Montcalm — The Alarm — March of French Troops — The Battle — The Rout — The Pursuit — Fall of Wolfe and of Montcalm	102

CHAPTER XXVIII

1759

FALL OF QUEBEC

After the Battle.—Canadians resist the Pursuit — Arrival of Vaudreuil — Scene in the Redoubt — Panic.—Movements of the Victors — Vaudreuil's Council of War — Precipitate Retreat of the French Army — Last Hours of Montcalm; his Death and Burial. — Quebec abandoned to its Fate — Despair of the Garrison. — Lévis joins the Army — Attempts to relieve the Town — Surrender — The British occupy Quebec — Slanders of Vaudreuil — Reception in England of the News of Wolfe's Victory and Death — Prediction of Jonathan Mayhew	148
--	-----

CHAPTER XXIX.

1759, 1760.

SAINTE-FOY

Quebec after the Siege — Captain Knox and the Nuns. — Escape of French Ships — Winter at Quebec — Threats of Lévis. — Attacks. — Skirmishes. — Feat of the Rangers — State of the Garrison — The French prepare to retake Quebec. — Advance of Lévis — The Alarm — Sortie of the English — Rash Determination of Murray — Battle of Ste.-Foy — Retreat of the English — Lévis besieges Quebec — Spirit of the Garrison — Peril of their Situation — Relief — Quebec saved. — Retreat of Lévis — The News in England	172
---	-----

CHAPTER XXX.

1760.

FALL OF CANADA.

PAGE

Desperate Situation — Efforts of Vaudreuil and Lévis — Plans of Amherst — A Triple Attack — Advance of Murray — Advance of Haviland — Advance of Amherst, — Capitulation of Montreal — Protest of Lévis — Injustice of Louis XV — Joy in the British Colonies, — Character of the War . . .	206
---	-----

CHAPTER XXXI.

1758-1763

THE PEACE OF PARIS.

Exodus of Canadian Leaders — Wreck of the "Auguste" — Trial of Bigot and his Confederates — Frederick of Prussia: his Triumphs, his Reverses, his Peril, his Fortitude — Death of George II — Change of Policy — Chosenul, his Overture, of Peace — The Family Compact — Fall of Pitt — Death of the Czarina — Frederick saved — War with Spain. — Capture of Havana — Negotiations — Terms of Peace — Shall Canada be restored? — Speech of Pitt — The Treaty signed — End of the Seven Years' War .	229
---	-----

CHAPTER XXXII.

1763-1884.

CONCLUSION.

Results of the War — Germany — France — England. — Canada — The British Provinces	255
---	-----

APPENDIX	263
INDEX	297

Illustrations

VOLUME III.

MAJOR-GENERAL JAMES WOLFE	Frontispiece
Photogravured by Goupi and Co., Paris, from the original painting by Joseph Highmore, in the possession of Mrs Mary Anne Armstrong, Pen-rance, England.
BOISHEBART	Page 9
From the painting in the possession of Mrs de St. Ours, St Ours, Canada
SIR CHARLES SAUNDLES	" 32
From a mezzotint engraving by J McAdell.
SIEGE OF QUEBEC, 1759	" 41
A VIEW OF THE FALLS OF MONTMORENCI	" 50
From an engraving by William Elliot, after a drawing by Captain Hervey Smyth.
THE DEATH OF WOLFE	" 102
From a mezzotint engraving by Richard Houston, after the painting by Edward Penny.
A VIEW OF CAPE ROUGE	" 120
From an engraving by Peter Mazell, after a drawing by Captain Hervey Smyth
THE FALL OF MONTREAL	" 141
From a painting by Howard Pyle.

Illustrations.

A VIEW OF THE BISHOP'S HOUSE AND THE RUINS AS THEY APPEAR IN GOING UP THE HILL FROM THE LOWER TO THE UPPER TOWN.	Page 172
From an engraving by A. Benoit, after a drawing by Richard Short.
A VIEW OF THE CHURCH OF NOTRE DAME DE LA VICTOIRE	" 174
From an engraving by A. Benoit, after a drawing by Richard Short.
DUC DE CHOISUL	" 240
From the painting by Van Loo, in the Versailles Gallery.

THE PORTRAIT OF WOLFE.

THE portrait of WOLFE in the present edition of this book was never before made known to the public. The picture from which it is taken was painted from life by Highmore, an English artist well known in the last century. When Wolfe, then a mere boy, received his first commission and was about to join the army, he caused his likeness to be painted in uniform, and gave it, as a token of attachment, to Reverend Samuel Francis Swinden, Vicar of Greenwich, whose pupil he had been, and whose friend he remained for life. The descendants of this gentleman still possess it; and it is to their kindness, and especially to that of his great-great-granddaughter, Miss Florence Armstrong, that I owe the photograph which is here reproduced. It is believed that Wolfe never again sat for his portrait. After his death his mother caused a miniature to be taken from the Highmore picture, and from this several enlarged copies were afterwards made.

The portrait in possession of Admiral Warde, hitherto supposed to be an original, now seems to be one of these copies. It appeared first in Wright's "Life of Wolfe," and is the same that was engraved for the early editions of "Montcalm and Wolfe." The existence of the present more trustworthy and interesting picture has been known to few besides its fortunate possessors.

Note by the Author to the Edition of 1887.

In order to reproduce with the utmost accuracy the portrait referred to in the above note, the publishers sent to Penzance, Cornwall, and obtained a photograph of the original painting, from which the photogravure plate in the present edition (1898) has been made.

MONTCALM AND WOLFE.

MONTCALM AND WOLFE.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1758, 1759.

THE BRINK OF RUIN.

JEALOUSY OF VAUDREUIL · HE ASKS FOR MONTCALM'S RECALL; HIS DISCOMFIGURE — SCENE AT THE GOVERNOR'S HOUSE. — DISGUST OF MONTCALM. — THE CANADIANS DESPONDENT — DEVICES TO ENCOURAGE THEM — GASCONADE OF THE GOVERNOR — DEPLORABLE STATE OF THE COLONY — MISSION OF BOUGAINVILLE — DUPLICITY OF VAUDREUIL — BOUGAINVILLE AT VERSAILLES — SUBSTANTIAL AID REFUSED TO CANADA — A MATRIMONIAL TREATY — RETURN OF BOUGAINVILLE — MONTCALM ABANDONED BY THE COURT, HIS PLANS OF DEFENCE. — SAD NEWS FROM CANDIAC. — BOASTS OF VAUDREUIL.

"NEVER was general in a more critical position than I was: God has delivered me; his be the praise! He gives me health, though I am worn out with labor, fatigue, and miserable dissensions that have determined me to ask for my recall. Heaven grant that I may get it!"

Thus wrote Montcalm to his mother after his triumph at Ticonderoga. That great exploit had entailed a train of vexations, for it stirred the envy of Vaudreuil, more especially as it was due to the troops of the line, with no help from Indians, and very little from Canadians. The governor assured the colonial minister that the victory would have had results, though he gives no hint what these might be; that Montcalm had mismanaged the whole affair; that he would have been beaten but for the manifest interposition of Heaven;¹ and, finally, that he had failed to follow his (Vaudreuil's) directions, and had therefore enabled the English to escape. The real directions of the governor, dictated, perhaps, by dread lest his rival should reap laurels, were to avoid a general engagement; and it was only by setting them at nought that Abercrombie had been routed. After the battle a sharp correspondence passed between the two chiefs. The governor, who had left Montcalm to his own resources before the crisis, sent him Canadians and Indians in abundance after it was over; and while he cautiously refrained from committing himself by positive orders, repeated again and again that if these reinforcements were used to harass Abercrombie's communications, the whole English army would fall back to the Hudson, and leave baggage and artillery a prey to the French. These preposterous assertions and tardy succors were thought by Montcalm to be a device for giving color to the charge that he had not only failed to deserve victory, but had failed also to make use of it.² He us." They had been sufficiently confident even before their victory; and the bearer of a flag of truce told the English officers that he had never imagined they were such fools as to attack Quebec with so small a force. Wolfe, on the other hand, had every reason to despond. At the outset, before he had seen Quebec and learned the nature of the ground, he had meant to begin the campaign by taking post on the Plains of Abraham, and thence laying siege to the town; but he soon discovered that the Plains of Abraham were hardly more within his reach than was Quebec itself. Such hope as was left him lay in the composition of Montcalm's army. He respected the French commander, and thought his disciplined soldiers not unworthy of the British steel; but he held his militia in high scorn, and could he but face them in the open field, he never doubted the result. But Montcalm also distrusted them, and persisted in refusing the coveted battle.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Août, 1758

² Much of the voluminous correspondence on these matters will be found in N. Y. Col. Docs, x.

Wolfe, therefore, was forced to the conviction that his chances were of the smallest. It is said that, despairing of any decisive stroke, he conceived the idea of fortifying Isle-aux-Coudres, and leaving a part of his troops there when he sailed for home, against another attempt in the spring. The more to weaken the enemy and prepare his future conquest, he began at the same time a course of action which for his credit one would gladly wipe from the record; for, though far from inhuman, he threw himself with extraordinary intensity into whatever work he had in hand, and, to accomplish it, spared others scarcely more than he spared himself. About the middle of August he issued a third proclamation to the Canadians, declaring that as they had refused his offers of protection and "had made such ungrateful returns in practising the most unchristian barbarities against his troops on all occasions, he could no longer refrain in justice to himself and his army from chastising them as they deserved." The barbarities in question consisted in the frequent scalping and mutilating of sentinels and men on outpost duty, perpetrated no less by Canadians than by Indians. Wolfe's object was twofold: first, to cause the militia to desert, and, secondly, to exhaust the colony. Rangers, light infantry, and Highlanders were sent to waste the settlements far and wide. Wherever resistance was offered, farmhouses and villages were laid in ashes, though churches were generally spared. St. Paul, far below Quebec, was sacked and burned, and the settlements of the opposite shore were partially destroyed. The parishes of L'Ange Gardien, Châteaue Richer, and St. Joachim were wasted with fire and sword. Night after night the garrison of Quebec could see the light of burning houses as far down as the mountain of Cape Tourmente. Near St. Joachim there was a severe skirmish, followed by atrocious cruelties. Captain Alexander Montgomery, of the forty-third regiment, who commanded the detachment, and who has been most unjustly confounded with the revolutionary general, Richard Montgomery, ordered the prisoners to be shot in cold blood, to the indignation of his own officers.¹ Robineau de Portneuf, curé of St. Joachim, placed himself at the head of thirty parishioners and took possession of a large stone house in the adjacent parish of Château Richer, where for a time he held the English at bay. At length he and his followers were drawn out into an ambush, where they were surrounded and killed; and, being disguised as Indians, the rangers scalped them all.²

Most of the French writers of the time mention these barbarities without much comment, while Vaudreuil loudly denounces them. Yet he himself was answerable for atrocities incomparably worse, and on a far larger scale. He had turned loose his savages, red and white, along a frontier of six hundred miles, to waste, burn, and murder at will. "Women and children," such were the orders of Wolfe, "are to be treated with humanity; if any violence is offered to a woman, the offender shall be punished with death." These orders were generally obeyed. The English, with the single exception of Montgomery, killed none but armed men in the act of resistance or attack; Vaudreuil's war-parties spared neither age nor sex.

Montcalm let the parishes burn, and still lay fast

¹ Fraser, Journal. Fraser was an officer under Montgomery, of whom he speaks with anger and disgust

² Knox, ii 32. Most of the contemporary journals mention the incident.

intrenched in his lines of Beauport. He would not imperil all Canada to save a few hundred farmhouses; and Wolfe was as far as ever from the battle that he coveted. Hitherto, his attacks had been made chiefly below the town; but, these having failed, he now changed his plan and renewed on a larger scale the movements begun above it in July. With every fair wind, ships and transports passed the batteries of Quebec, favored by a hot fire from Point Levi, and generally succeeded, with more or less damage, in gaining the upper river. A fleet of flatboats was also sent thither, and twelve hundred troops marched overland to embark in them, under Brigadier Murray. Admiral Holmes took command of the little fleet now gathered above the town, and operations in that quarter were systematically resumed.

To oppose them, Bougainville was sent from the camp at Beauport with fifteen hundred men. His was a most arduous and exhausting duty. He must watch the shores for fifteen or twenty miles, divide his force into detachments, and subject himself and his followers to the strain of incessant vigilance and incessant marching. Murray made a descent at Pointe-aux-Trembles, and was repulsed with loss. He tried a second time at another place, was met before landing by a body of ambushed Canadians, and was again driven back, his foremost boats full of dead and wounded. A third time he succeeded, landed at Deschambault, and burned a large building filled with stores and all the spare baggage of the did what was possible, and sent strong detachments to act in the English rear; which, though they did not, and could not, compel the enemy to fall back, caused no slight annoyance, till Rogers checked them by the defeat of Marin. Nevertheless Vaudreuil pretended on one hand that Montcalm had done nothing with the Canadians and Indians sent him, and on the other that these same Canadians and Indians had triumphed over the enemy by their mere presence at Ticonderoga. "It was my activity in sending these succors to Carillon [Ticonderoga] that forced the English to retreat. The Marquis de Montcalm might have made their retreat difficult; but it was in vain that I wrote to him, in vain that the colony troops, Canadians and Indians, begged him to pursue the enemy."¹ The succors he speaks of were sent in July and August, while the English did not fall back till the first of November. Neither army left its position till the season was over, and Abercrombie did so only when he learned that the French were setting the example. Vaudreuil grew more and more bitter. "As the King has intrusted this colony to me, I cannot help warning you of the unhappy consequences that would follow if the Marquis de Montcalm should remain here. I shall keep him by me till I receive your orders. It is essential that they reach me early." "I pass over in silence all the infamous conduct and indecent talk he has held or countenanced; but I should be wanting in my duty to the King if I did not beg you to ask for his recall." ¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759.

He does not say what is meant by infamous conduct and indecent talk; but the allusion is probably to irreverent utterances touching the governor in which the officers from France were apt to indulge, not always without the knowledge of their chief. Vaudreuil complained of this to Montcalm, adding, "I am greatly above it, and I despise it." ² To which the general replied: "You are right to despise gossip, supposing that there has been any. For my part, though I hear that I have been torn to pieces without mercy in your presence, I do not believe it." ³ In these infelicities Bigot figures as peacemaker, though with no perceptible success. Vaudreuil's cup of bitterness was full when letters came from Versailles ordering him to defer to Montcalm on all questions of war, or of civil administration bearing upon war. ⁴ He had begged hard for his rival's recall, and in reply his rival was set over his head.

The two yokefellows were excellently fitted to exasperate each other: Montcalm, with his southern vivacity of emotion and an impetuous, impatient volubility that sometimes forgot prudence; and Vaudreuil, always affable towards adherents, but full of suspicious egotism and restless jealousy that

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759.

² Vaudreuil à Montcalm, 1 Août, 1758.

³ Montcalm à Vaudreuil, 6 Août, 1758.

⁴ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1758, 1759.

bristled within him at the very thought of his colleague. Some of the by-play of the quarrel may be seen in Montcalm's familiar correspondence with Bourlamaque. One day the governor, in his own house, brought up the old complaint that Montcalm, after taking Fort William Henry, did not take Fort Edward also. The general, for the twentieth time, gave good reasons for not making the attempt. "I ended," he tells Bourlamaque, "by saying quietly that when I went to war I did the best I could; and that when one is not pleased with one's lieutenants, one had better take the field in person. He was very much moved, and muttered between his teeth that perhaps he would; at which I said that I should be delighted to serve under him. Madame de Vaudreuil wanted to put in her word. I said: 'Madame, saving due respect, permit me to have the honor to say that ladies ought not to talk war.' She kept on. I said: 'Madame, saving due respect, permit me to have the honor to say that if Madame de Montcalm were here, and heard me talking war with Monsieur le Marquis de Vaudreuil, she would remain silent.' This scene was in presence of eight officers, three of them belonging to the colony troops; and a pretty story they will make of it."

These letters to Bourlamaque, in their detestable handwriting, small, cramped, confused, without stops, and sometimes almost indecipherable, betray the writer's state of mind. "I should like as well as anybody to be Marshal of France; but to buy the honor with the life I am leading here would be too much." He recounts the last news from Fort Duquesne, just before its fall. "Mutiny among the Canadians, who want to come home; the officers busy with making money, and stealing like mandarins. Their commander sets the example, and will come back with three or four hundred thousand francs; the pettiest ensign, who does not gamble, will have ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand. The Indians don't like Ligneris, who is drunk every day. Forgive the confusion of this letter; I have not slept all night with thinking of the robberies and mismanagement and folly. Pauvre Roi, pauvre France, cara patria!" "Oh, when shall we get out of this country! I think I would give half that I have to go home. Pardon this digression to a melancholy man. It is not that I have not still some remnants of gayety; but what would seem such in anybody else is melancholy for a Languedocian. Burn my letter, and never doubt my attachment." "I shall always say, Happy he who is free from the proud yoke to which I am bound. When shall I see my château of Candiac, my plantations, my chestnut grove, my oil-mill, my mulberry-trees? O bon Dieu! Bon soir; brûlez ma lettre."¹

Never was dispute more untimely than that between these ill-matched colleagues. The position of the colony was desperate. Thus far the Canadians had never lost heart, but had obeyed with admirable alacrity the governor's call to arms, borne with patience the burdens and privations of the war, and submitted without revolt to the exactions and oppressions of Cadet and his crew; loyal to their native soil, loyal to their Church, loyal to the wretched government that crushed and belittled them. When the able-bodied were ordered to the war, where four-fifths of them were employed in the hard and tedious work of transportation, the women, boys, and old men tilled the fields and raised a scanty harvest, which always might be, and sometimes was, taken from them in the name of the King. Yet the least destitute among them were forced every winter to lodge soldiers in their houses, for each of whom they were paid fifteen francs a month, in return for substance devoured and wives and daughters debauched.¹

¹ The above extracts are from letters of 5 and 27 November and 9 December, 1758, and 18 and 23 March, 1759

No pains had been spared to keep up the courage of the people and feed them with flattering illusions. When the partisan officer Boishébert was tried for peculation, his counsel met the charge by extolling the manner in which he had fulfilled the arduous duty of encouraging the Acadians, "putting on an air of triumph even in defeat; using threats, caresses, stratagems; painting our victories in vivid colors; hiding the strength and successes of the enemy; promising succors that did not and could not come, inventing plausible reasons why they did not come, and making new promises to set off the failure of the old; persuading a starved people to forget their misery; taking from some to give to others; and doing all this continually in the face of a superior enemy, that this country might be snatched from England and saved to France.”¹ What Boishébert was doing in Acadia, Vaudreuil was doing on a larger scale in Canada. By indefatigable lying, by exaggerating every success and covering over every reverse, he deceived the people and in some measure himself. He had in abundance the Canadian gift of gasconade, and boasted to the colonial minister that one of his countrymen was a match for from three to ten Englishmen. It is possible that he almost believed it; for the midnight surprise of defenceless families and the spreading of panics among scattered border settlements were inseparable from his idea of war. Hence the high value he set on Indians, who in such work outdid the Canadians themselves. Sustained by the intoxication of flattering falsehoods, and not doubting that the blunders and weakness of the first years of the war gave the measure of English efficiency, the colonists had never suspected that they could be subdued.

¹ Mémoire sur le moyen d'entretenir 10,000 Hommes de Troupes dans les Colonies, 1759.

But now there was a change. The reverses of the last campaign, hunger, weariness, and possibly some incipient sense of atrocious misgovernment, began to produce their effect; and some, especially in the towns, were heard to murmur that further resistance was useless. The Canadians, though brave and patient, needed, like Frenchmen, the stimulus of success. "The people are alarmed," said the modest governor, "and would lose courage if my firmness did not rekindle their zeal to serve the King."¹

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour le Sieur de Boishébert.

"Rapacity, folly, intrigue, falsehood, will soon ruin this colony which has cost the King so dear," wrote Doreil to the minister of war. "We must not flatter ourselves with vain hope; Canada is lost if we do not have peace this winter." "It has been saved by miracle in these past three years; nothing but peace can save it now, in spite of all the efforts and the talents of M. de Montcalm."² Vaudreuil himself became thoroughly alarmed, and told the court in the autumn of 1758 that food, arms, munitions, and everything else were fast failing, and that without immediate peace or heavy reinforcements all was lost.

The condition of Canada was indeed deplorable. The St. Lawrence was watched by British ships; the harvest was meagre; a barrel of flour cost two hundred francs; most of the cattle and many of the horses had been killed for food. The people lived chiefly on a pittance of salt cod or on rations furnished by the King; all prices were inordinate; the officers from France were starving on their pay; while a legion of indigenous and imported scoundrels fattened on the general distress. "What a country!" exclaims Montcalm. "Here all the knaves grow rich, and the honest men are ruined." Yet he was resolved to stand by it to the last, and wrote to the minister of war that he would bury himself under its ruins. "I asked for my recall after the glorious affair of the eighth of July; but since the state of the colony is so bad, I must do what I can to help it and retard its fall." The only hope was in a strong appeal to the court; and he thought himself fortunate in persuading Vaudreuil to consent that Bougainville should be commissioned to make it, seconded by Doreil. They were to sail in different ships, in order that at least one of them might arrive safe.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 10 Avril, 1759.

² Doreil au Ministre, 31 Juillet, 1758. Ibid., 12 Août, 1758. Ibid., 31 Août, 1758. Ibid., 1 Septembre, 1758.

Vaudreuil gave Bougainville a letter introducing him to the colonial minister in high terms of praise: "He is in all respects better fitted than anybody else to inform you of the state of the colony. I have given him my instructions, and you can trust entirely in what he tells you."¹ Concerning Doreil he wrote to the minister of war: "I have full confidence in him, and he may be entirely trusted. Everybody here likes him."² While thus extolling the friends of his rival, the governor took care to provide against the effects of his politic commendations, and wrote thus to his patron, the colonial minister: "In order to condescend to the wishes of M. de Montcalm, and leave no means untried to keep in harmony with him, I have given letters to MM. Doreil and Bougainville; but I have the honor to inform you, Monseigneur, that they do not understand the colony, and to warn you that they are creatures of M. de Montcalm.”¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 4 Novembre, 1758.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Guerre, 11 Octobre, 1758.

The two envoys had sailed for France. Winter was close at hand, and the harbor of Quebec was nearly empty. One ship still lingered, the last of the season, and by her Montcalm sent a letter to his mother: “You will be glad to have me write to you up to the last moment to tell you for the hundredth time that, occupied as I am with the fate of New France, the preservation of the troops, the interest of the state, and my own glory, I think continually of you all. We did our best in 1756, 1757, and 1758; and so, God helping, we will do in 1759, unless you make peace in Europe.” Then, shut from the outer world for half a year by barriers of ice, he waited what returning spring might bring forth.

Both Bougainville and Doreil escaped the British cruisers and safely reached Versailles, where, in the slippery precincts of the court, as new to him as they were treacherous, the young aide-de-camp justified all the confidence of his chief. He had interviews with the ministers, the King, and, more important than all, with Madame de Pompadour, whom he succeeded in propitiating, though not, it seems, without difficulty and delay. France, unfortunate by land and sea, with finances ruined and navy crippled, had gained one brilliant victory, and she owed it to Montcalm. She could pay for it in honors, if in nothing else. Montcalm was made lieutenant-general, Lévis major-general, Bourlamaque brigadier, and Bougainville colonel and chevalier of St. Louis; while Vaudreuil was solaced with the grand cross of that order.¹ But when the two envoys asked substantial aid for the imperilled colony, the response was chilling. The colonial minister, Berryer, prepossessed against Bougainville by the secret warning of Vaudreuil, received him coldly, and replied to his appeal for help: "Eh, Monsieur, when the house is on fire one cannot occupy one's self with the stable." "At least, Monsieur, nobody will say that you talk like a horse," was the irreverent answer.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 3 Novembre, 1758.

Bougainville laid four memorials before the court, in which he showed the desperate state of the colony and its dire need of help. Thus far, he said, Canada has been saved by the dissensions of the English colonies; but now, for the first time, they are united against her, and prepared to put forth their strength. And he begged for troops, arms, munitions, food, and a squadron to defend the mouth of the St. Lawrence.² The reply, couched in a letter to

¹ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Janvier, Février, 1759.

² Mémoire remis au Ministre par M. de Bougainville, Décembre, 1758.

Montcalm, was to the effect that it was necessary to concentrate all the strength of the kingdom for a decisive operation in Europe; that, therefore, the aid required could not be sent; and that the King trusted everything to his zeal and generalship, joined with the valor of the victors of Ticonderoga.¹ All that could be obtained was between three and four hundred recruits for the regulars, sixty engineers, sappers, and artillerymen, and gunpowder, arms, and provisions sufficient, along with the supplies brought over by the contractor, Cadet, to carry the colony through the next campaign.²

Montcalm had intrusted Bougainville with another mission, widely different. This was no less than the negotiating of suitable marriages for the eldest son and daughter of his commander, with whom, in the confidence of friendship, he had had many conversations on the matter. "He and I," Montcalm wrote to his mother, Madame de Saint-Véran, "have two ideas touching these marriages, — the first, romantic and chimerical; the second, good, practicable."³ Bougainville, invoking the aid of a lady of rank, a friend of the family, acquitted himself well of his delicate task. Before he embarked for Canada, in early spring, a treaty was on foot for the marriage of the young Comte de Montcalm to an heiress of sixteen; while Mademoiselle de Montcalm had already become Madame d'Espineuse. "Her father will be delighted," says the successful negotiator.¹

¹ Le Ministre à Montcalm, 3 Février, 1759.

Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Février, 1759

Montcalm à Madame de Saint-Véran, 24 Septembre, 1758.

Again he crossed the Atlantic and sailed up the St. Lawrence as the portentous spring of 1759 was lowering over the dissolving snows of Canada. With him came a squadron bearing the supplies and the petty reinforcement which the court had vouchsafed. "A little is precious to those who have nothing," said Montcalm on receiving them. Despatches from the ministers gave warning of a great armament fitted out in English ports for the attack of Quebec, while a letter to the general from the Maréchal de Belleisle, minister of war, told what was expected of him, and why he and the colony were abandoned to their fate. "If we sent a large reinforcement of troops," said Belleisle, "there would be great fear that the English would intercept them on the way; and as the King could never send you forces equal to those which the English are prepared to oppose to you, the attempt would have no other effect than to excite the Cabinet of London to increased efforts for preserving its superiority on the American continent.

"As we must expect the English to turn all their force against Canada, and attack you on several sides at once, it is necessary that you limit your plans of defence to the most essential points and those most closely connected, so that, being concentrated within a smaller space, each part may be within reach of support and succor from the rest. How small soever may be the space you are able to hold, it is indispensable to keep a footing in North America; for if we once lose the country entirely, its recovery will be almost impossible. The King counts on your zeal, courage, and persistency to accomplish this object, and relies on you to spare no pains and no exertions. Impart this resolution to your chief officers, and join with them to inspire your soldiers with it. I have answered for you to the King; I am confident that you will not disappoint me, and that for the glory of the nation, the good of the state, and your own preservation, you will go to the utmost extremity rather than submit to conditions as shameful as those imposed at Louisbourg, the memory of which you will wipe out."¹ "We will save this unhappy colony, or perish," was the answer of Montcalm.

¹ Lettres de Bougainville à Madame de Saint-Véran, 1758, 1759,

It was believed that Canada would be attacked with at least fifty thousand men. Vaudreuil had caused a census to be made of the governments of Montreal, Three Rivers, and Quebec. It showed a little more than thirteen thousand effective men.² To these were to be added thirty-five hundred troops of the line, including the late reinforcement, fifteen hundred colony troops, a body of irregulars in Acadia, and the militia and coureurs de bois of Detroit and the other upper posts, along with from one to two thousand Indians who could still be counted on.

¹ Belleisle à Montcalm, 19 Février, 1759

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759 The Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760, says 15,229 effective men.

Great as was the disparity of numbers, there was good hope that the centre of the colony could be defended; for the only avenues by which an enemy could approach were barred by the rock of Québec, the rapids of the St. Lawrence, and the strong position of Isle-aux-Noix, at the outlet of Lake Champlain. Montcalm had long inclined to the plan of concentration enjoined on him by the minister of war. Vaudreuil was of another mind; he insisted on still occupying Acadia and the forts of the upper country: matters on which he and the general exchanged a correspondence that widened the breach between them.

Should every effort of resistance fail, and the invaders force their way into the heart of Canada, Montcalm proposed the desperate resort of abandoning the valley of the St. Lawrence, descending the Mississippi with his troops and as many as possible of the inhabitants, and making a last stand for France among the swamps of Louisiana.¹

In April, before Bougainville's return, he wrote to his wife: "Can we hope for another miracle to save us? I trust in God; he fought for us on the eighth of July. Come what may, his will be done! I wait the news from France with impatience and dread. We have had none for eight months; and who knows if much can reach us at all this year? How dearly I have to pay for the dismal privilege of figuring two or three times in the gazettes!" A month later, after Bougainville had come: "Our daughter is well married. I think I would renounce every honor to join you again; but the King must be obeyed. The moment when I see you once more will be the brightest of my life. Adieu, my heart! I believe that I love you more than ever."

¹ Mémoire sur le Canada remis au Ministre, 27 Décembre, 1758.

Bougainville had brought sad news. He had heard before sailing from France that one of Montcalm's daughters was dead, but could not learn which of them. "I think," says the father, "that it must be poor Mirète, who was like me, and whom I loved very much." He was never to know if this conjecture was true.

To Vaudreuil came a repetition of the detested order that he should defer to Montcalm on all questions of war; and moreover that he should not take command in person except when the whole body of the militia was called out; nor, even then, without consulting his rival.¹ His ire and vexation produced an access of jealous self-assertion, and drove him into something like revolt against the ministerial command. "If the English attack Quebec, I shall always hold myself free to go thither myself with most of the troops and all the militia and Indians I can assemble. On arriving I shall give battle to the enemy; and I shall do so again and again, till I have forced him to retire, or till he has entirely crushed me by excessive superiority of numbers. My obstinacy in opposing his landing will be the more à propos, as I have not the means of sustaining a siege. If I succeed as I wish, I shall next march to Carillon to arrest him there. You see, Monseigneur, that the slightest change in my arrangements would have the most unfortunate consequences."¹

¹ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Lettre à Vaudreuil, 3 Février, 1759.

Whether he made good this valorous declaration will presently be seen.

NOTE. — The Archives de la Guerre and the Archives de la Marine contain a mass of letters and documents on the subjects treated in the above chapter; these I have carefully read and collated. The other principal authorities are the correspondence of Montcalm with Bourlamaque and with his own family; the letters of Vaudreuil preserved in the Archives Nationales; and the letters of Bougainville and Doreil to Montcalm and Madame de Saint-Véran while on their mission to France. For copies of these last I am indebted to the present Marquis de Montcalm.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1758, 1759.

WOLFE.

THE EXILES OF FORT CUMBERLAND. — RELIEF. — THE VOYAGE TO LOUISBOURG — THE BRITISH FLEET — EXPEDITION AGAINST QUEBEC — EARLY LIFE OF WOLFE HIS CHARACTER, HIS LETTERS TO HIS PARENTS; HIS DOMESTIC QUALITIES — APPOINTED TO COMMAND THE EXPEDITION. — SAILS FOR AMERICA

CAPTAIN JOHN KNOX, of the forty-third regiment, had spent the winter in garrison at Fort Cumberland, on the hill of Beauséjour. For nearly two years he and his comrades had been exiles amid the wilds of Nova Scotia, and the monotonous inaction was becoming insupportable. The great marsh of Tante-mare on the one side, and that of Missaguash on the other, two vast flat tracts of glaring snow, bounded by dark hills of spruce and fir, were hateful to their sight. Shooting, fishing, or skating were a dangerous relief; for the neighborhood was infested by "vermin," as they called the Acadians and their Micmac allies. In January four soldiers and a ranger were waylaid not far from the fort, disabled by bullets, and then scalped alive. They were found the next morning on the snow, contorted in the agonies of death, and frozen like marble statues. St. Patrick's Day brought more cheerful excitements. The Irish officers of the garrison gave their comrades a feast, having laid in during the autumn a stock of frozen provisions, that the festival of their saint might be duly honored. All was hilarity at Fort Cumberland, where it is recorded that punch to the value of twelve pounds sterling, with a corresponding supply of wine and beer, was consumed on this joyous occasion.¹

About the middle of April a schooner came up the bay, bringing letters that filled men and officers with delight. The regiment was ordered to hold itself ready to embark for Louisbourg and join an expedition to the St. Lawrence, under command of Major-General Wolfe. All that afternoon the soldiers were shouting and cheering in their barracks; and when they mustered for the evening roll-call, there was another burst of huzzas. They waited in expectancy nearly three weeks, and then the transports which were to carry them arrived, bringing the provincials who had been hastily raised in New England to take their place. These Knox describes as a mean-looking set of fellows, of all ages and sizes, and without any kind of discipline; adding that their officers are sober, modest men, who, though of confined ideas, talk very clearly and sensibly, and make a decent appearance in blue, faced with scarlet, though the privates have no uniform at all.

At last the forty-third set sail, the cannon of the fort saluting them, and the soldiers cheering lustily, overjoyed to escape from their long imprisonment. A gale soon began; the transports became separated; Knox's vessel sheltered herself for a time in Passamaquoddy Bay; then passed the Grand Menan, and steered southward and eastward along the coast of Nova Scotia. A calm followed the gale; and they moved so slowly that Knox beguiled the time by fishing over the stern, and caught a halibut so large that he was forced to call for help to pull it in. Then they steered northeastward, now lost in fogs, and now tossed mercilessly on those boisterous waves; till, on the twenty-fourth of May, they saw a rocky and surf-lashed shore, with a forest of masts rising to all appearance out of it. It was the British fleet in the land-locked harbor of Louisbourg.

¹ Knox, Historical Journal, i. 228.

On the left, as they sailed through the narrow passage, lay the town, scarred with shot and shell, the red cross floating over its battered ramparts; and around in a wide semi-circle rose the bristling backs of rugged hills, set thick with dismal evergreens. They passed the great ships of the fleet, and anchored among the other transports towards the head of the harbor. It was not yet free from ice; and the floating masses lay so thick in some parts that the reckless sailors, returning from leave on shore, jumped from one to another to regain their ships. There was a review of troops, and Knox went to see it; but it was over before he reached the place, where he was presently told of a characteristic reply just made by Wolfe to some officers who had apologized for not having taught their men the new exercise. "Poh, poh! — new exercise — new fiddle-stuck. If they are otherwise well disciplined, and will fight, that's all I shall require of them."

Knox does not record his impressions of his new commander, which must have been disappointing. He called him afterwards a British Achilles, but in person at least Wolfe bore no likeness to the son of Peleus, for never was the soul of a hero cased in a frame so incongruous. His face, when seen in profile, was singular as that of the Great Condé. The forehead and chin receded; the nose, slightly upturned, formed with the other features the point of an obtuse triangle; the mouth was by no means shaped to express resolution; and nothing but the clear, bright, and piercing eye bespoke the spirit within. On his head he wore a black three-cornered hat; his red hair was tied in a queue behind; his narrow shoulders, slender body, and long, thin limbs were cased in a scarlet frock, with broad cuffs and ample skirts that reached the knee; while on his left arm he wore a band of crape in mourning for his father, of whose death he had heard a few days before.

James Wolfe was in his thirty-third year. His father was an officer of distinction, Major-General Edward Wolfe, and he himself, a delicate and sensitive child, but an impetuous and somewhat headstrong youth, had served the King since the age of fifteen. From childhood he had dreamed of the army and the wars. At sixteen he was in Flanders, adjutant of his regiment, discharging the duties of the post in a way that gained him early promotion and, along with a painstaking assiduity, showing a precocious faculty for commanding men. He passed with credit through several campaigns, took part in the victory of Dettingen, and then went to Scotland to fight at Culloden. Next we find him at Stirling, Perth, and Glasgow, always ardent and always diligent, constant in military duty, and giving his spare hours to mathematics and Latin. He presently fell in love; and being disappointed, plunged into a variety of dissipations, contrary to his usual habits, which were far above the standard of that profligate time.

At twenty-three he was a lieutenant-colonel, commanding his regiment in the then dirty and barbarous town of Inverness, amid a disaffected and turbulent population whom it was his duty to keep in order: a difficult task, which he accomplished so well as to gain the special commendation of the King, and even the goodwill of the Highlanders themselves. He was five years among these northern hills, battling with ill-health, and restless under the intellectual barrenness of his surroundings. He felt his position to be in no way salutary, and wrote to his mother: "The fear of becoming a mere ruffian and of imbibing the tyrannical principles of an absolute commander, or giving way insensibly to the temptations of power till I became proud, insolent, and intolerable, — these considerations will make me wish to leave the regiment before next winter; that by frequenting men above myself I may know my true condition, and by discoursing with the other sex may learn some civility and mildness of carriage." He got leave of absence, and spent six months in Paris, where he was presented at court and saw much of the best society. This did not prevent him from working hard to perfect himself in French, as well as in horsemanship, fencing, dancing, and other accomplishments, and from earnestly seeking an opportunity to study the various armies of Europe. In this he was thwarted by the stupidity and prejudice of the commander-in-chief; and he made what amends he could by extensive reading in all that bore on military matters.

His martial instincts were balanced by strong domestic inclinations. He was fond of children; and after his disappointment in love used to say that they were the only true inducement to marriage. He was a most dutiful son, and wrote continually to both his parents. Sometimes he would philosophize on the good and ill of life; sometimes he held questionings with his conscience; and once he wrote to his mother in a strain of self-accusation not to be expected from a bold and determined soldier. His nature was a compound of tenderness and fire, which last sometimes showed itself in sharp and unpleasant flashes. His excitable temper was capable almost of fierceness, and he could now and then be needlessly stern; but towards his father, mother, and friends he was a model of steady affection. He made friends readily, and kept them, and was usually a pleasant companion, though subject to sallies of imperious irritability which occasionally broke through his strong sense of good breeding. For this his susceptible constitution was largely answerable, for he was a living barometer, and his spirits rose and fell with every change of weather. In spite of his impatient outbursts, the officers whom he had commanded remained attached to him for life; and, in spite of his rigorous discipline, he was beloved by his soldiers, to whose comfort he was always attentive. Frankness, directness, essential good feeling, and a high integrity atoned for all his faults.

In his own view, as expressed to his mother, he was a person of very moderate abilities, aided by more than usual diligence; but this modest judgment of himself by no means deprived him of self-confidence, nor, in time of need, of self-assertion. He delighted in every kind of hardihood; and, in his contempt for effeminacy, once said to his mother: "Better be a savage of some use than a gentle, amorous puppy, obnoxious to all the world." He was far from despising fame; but the controlling principles of his life were duty to his country and his profession, loyalty to the King, and fidelity to his own ideal of the perfect soldier. To the parent who was the confidant of his most intimate thoughts he said: "All that I wish for myself is that I may at all times be ready and firm to meet that fate we cannot shun, and to die gracefully and properly when the hour comes." Never was wish more signally fulfilled. Again he tells her: "My utmost desire and ambition is to look steadily upon danger;" and his desire was accomplished. His intrepidity was complete. No form of death had power to daunt him. Once and again, when bound on some deadly enterprise of war, he calmly counts the chances whether or not he can compel his feeble body to bear him on till the work is done. A frame so delicately strung could not have been insensible to danger; but forgetfulness of self, and the absorption of every faculty in the object before him, shut out the sense of fear. He seems always to have been at his best in the thick of battle; most complete in his mastery over himself and over others.

But it is in the intimacies of domestic life that one sees him most closely, and especially in his letters to his mother, from whom he inherited his frail constitution, without the beauty that distinguished her. "The greatest happiness that I wish for here is to see you happy." "If you stay much at home, I will come and shut myself up with you for three weeks or a month, and play at piquet from morning till night; and you shall laugh at my short red hair as much as you please." The playing at piquet was a sacrifice to filial attachment; for the mother loved cards, and the son did not. "Don't trouble yourself about my room or my bedclothes; too much care and delicacy at this time would enervate me and complete the destruction of a tottering constitution. Such as it is, it must serve me now, and I'll make the best of it while it holds." At the beginning of the war his father tried to dissuade him from offering his services on board the fleet; and he replies in a letter to Mrs. Wolfe: "It is no time to think of what is convenient or agreeable; that service is certainly the best in which we are the most useful. For my part, I am determined never to give myself a moment's concern about the nature of the duty which His Majesty is pleased to order us upon. It will be a sufficient comfort to you two, as far as my person is concerned, — at least it will be a reasonable consolation, — to reflect that the Power which has hitherto preserved me may, if it be his pleasure, continue to do so; if not, that it is but a few days or a few years more or less, and that those who perish in their duty and in the service of their country die honorably." Then he proceeds to give particular directions about his numerous dogs, for the welfare of which in his absence he provides with anxious solicitude, especially for "my friend Cæsar, who has great merit and much good-humor."

After the unfortunate expedition against Rochefort, when the board of general officers appointed to inquire into the affair were passing the highest encomiums upon his conduct, his parents were at Bath, and he took possession of their house at Blackheath, whence he wrote to his mother: "I lie in your chamber, dress in the General's little parlor, and dine where you did. The most perceptible difference and change of affairs (exclusive of the bad table I keep) is the number of dogs in the yard; but by coaxing Ball [his father's dog] and rubbing his back with my stick, I have reconciled him with the new ones, and put them in some measure under his protection."

When about to sail on the expedition against Louisbourg, he was anxious for his parents, and wrote to his uncle, Major Wolfe, at Dublin: "I trust you will give the best advice to my mother, and such assistance, if it should be wanted, as the distance between you will permit. I mention this because the General seems to decline apace, and narrowly escaped being carried off in the spring. She, poor woman, is in a bad state of health, and needs the care of some friendly hand. She has long and painful fits of illness, which by succession and inheritance are likely to devolve on me, since I feel the early symptoms of them." Of his friends Guy Carleton, afterwards Lord Dorchester, and George Warde, the companion of his boyhood, he also asks help for his mother in his absence.

His part in the taking of Louisbourg greatly increased his reputation. After his return he went to Bath to recruit his health; and it seems to have been here that he wooed and won Miss Katherine Lowther, daughter of an ex-governor of Barbadoes, and sister of the future Lord Lonsdale. A betrothal took place, and Wolfe wore her portrait till the night before his death. It was a little before this engagement that he wrote to his friend Lieutenant-Colonel Rickson: "I have this day signified to Mr. Pitt that he may dispose of my slight carcass as he pleases, and that I am ready for any undertaking within the compass of my skill and cunning. I am in a very bad condition both with the gravel and rheumatism; but I had much rather die than decline any kind of service that offers. If I followed my own taste it would lead me into Germany. However, it is not our part to choose, but to obey. My opinion is that I shall join the army in America."

Pitt chose him to command the expedition then fitting out against Quebec; made him a major-general, though, to avoid giving offence to older officers, he was to hold that rank in America alone; and permitted him to choose his own staff. Appointments made for merit, and not through routane and patronage, shocked the Duke of Newcastle, to whom a man like Wolfe was a hopeless enigma; and he told George II. that Pitt's new general was mad. "Mad is he?" returned the old King; "then I hope he will bite some others of my generals."

At the end of January the fleet was almost ready, and Wolfe wrote to his uncle Walter: "I am to act a greater part in this business than I wished. The backwardness of some of the older officers has in some measure forced the Government to come down so low. I shall do my best, and leave the rest to fortune, as perforce we must when there are not the most commanding abilities. We expect to sail in about three weeks. A London life and little exercise disagrees entirely with me, but the sea still more. If I have health and constitution enough for the campaign, I shall think myself a lucky man; what happens afterwards is of no great consequence." He sent to his mother an affectionate letter of farewell, went to Spithead, embarked with Admiral Saunders in the ship "Neptune," and set sail on the seventeenth of February. In a few hours the whole squadron was at sea, the transports, the frigates, and the great line-of-battle ships, with their ponderous armament and their freight of rude humanity armed and trained for destruction; while on the heaving deck of the "Neptune," wretched with seasickness and racked with pain, stood the gallant invalid who was master of it all.

The fleet consisted of twenty-two ships-of-the-line, with frigates, sloops-of-war, and a great number of transports. When Admiral Saunders arrived with his squadron off Louisbourg, he found the entrance blocked by ice, and was forced to seek harborage at Halifax. The squadron of Admiral Holmes, which had sailed a few days earlier, proceeded to New York to take on board troops destined for the expedition, while the squadron of Admiral Durell steered for the St. Lawrence to intercept the expected ships from France.

In May the whole fleet, except the ten ships with Durell, was united in the harbor of Louisbourg.

Twelve thousand troops were to have been employed for the expedition; but several regiments expected from the West Indies were for some reason countermanded, while the accessions from New York and the Nova Scotia garrisons fell far short of the looked-for numbers. Three weeks before leaving Louisbourg, Wolfe writes to his uncle Walter that he has an army of nine thousand men. The actual number seems to have been somewhat less.¹ "Our troops are good," he informs Pitt; "and if valor can make amends for the want of numbers, we shall probably succeed."

Three brigadiers, all in the early prime of life, held command under him: Monckton, Townshend, and Murray. They were all his superiors in birth, and one of them, Townshend, never forgot that he was so. "George Townshend," says Walpole, "has thrust himself again into the service; and, as far as wrongheadedness will go, is very proper for a hero."² The same caustic writer says further that he was of "a proud, sullen, and contemptuous temper," and that he "saw everything in an ill-natured and ridiculous light."³ Though his perverse and envious disposition made him a difficult colleague, Townshend had both talents and energy; as also had Monckton, the same officer who commanded at the capture of Beauséjour in 1755. Murray, too, was well matched to the work in hand, in spite of some lingering remains of youthful rashness.

¹ See Grenville Correspondence, i. 305

² Horace Walpole, Letters, iii. 207 (ed. Cunningham, 1857).

³ Ibid, George II., ii. 845.

On the sixth of June the last ship of the fleet sailed out of Louisbourg harbor, the troops cheering and the officers drinking to the toast, "British colors on every French fort, port, and garrison in America." The ships that had gone before lay to till the whole fleet was reunited, and then all steered together for the St. Lawrence. From the headland of Cape Egmont, the Micmac hunter, gazing far out over the shimmering sea, saw the horizon flecked with their canvas wings, as they bore northward on their errand of havoc.

NOTE. — For the material of the foregoing sketch of Wolfe I am indebted to Wright's excellent Life of him and the numerous letters contained in it. Several autograph letters which have escaped the notice of Mr. Wright are preserved in the Public Record Office. The following is a characteristic passage from one of these, written on board the "Neptune," at sea, on the sixth of June, the day when the fleet sailed from Louisbourg. It is directed to a nobleman of high rank in the army, whose name does not appear, the address being lost (War Office Records. North America, various, 1758-1768) "I have had the honour to receive two letters from your Lordship, one of an old date, concerning my stay in this country [after the capture of Louisbourg], in answer to which I shall only say that the Marshal told me I was to return at the end of the campaign; and as General Amheist had no other commands than to send me to winter at Halifax under the orders of an officer [Brigadier Lawrence] who was but a few months before put over my head, I thought it was much better to get into the way of service and out of the way of being insulted; and as the style of your Lordship's letter is pretty strong, I must take the liberty to inform you that . . . rather than receive orders in the Government [of Nova Scotia] from an officer younger than myself (though a very worthy man), I should certainly have desired leave to resign my commission; for as I neither ask nor expect any favour, so I never intend to submit to any ill-usage whatsoever "

Many other papers in the Public Record Office have been consulted in preparing the above chapter, including the secret instructions of the King to Wolfe and to Saunders, and the letters of Amherst to Wolfe and to Pitt. Other correspondence touching the same subjects is printed in Selections from the Public Documents of Nova Scotia, 441-450 Knox, Mante, and Entick are the best contemporary printed sources.

A story has gained currency respecting the last interview of Wolfe with Pitt, in which he is said to have flourished his sword and boasted of what he would achieve This anecdote was told by Lord Temple, who was present at the interview, to Mr. Grenville, who, many years after, told it to Earl Stanhope, by whom it was made public That the incident underwent essential changes in the course of these transmissions,—which extended over more than half a century, for Earl Stanhope was not born till 1805,—can never be doubted by one who considers the known character of Wolfe, who may have uttered some vehement expression, but who can never be suspected of gasconade.

CHAPTER XXV.

1759.

WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

FRENCH PREPARATION.—MUSTER OF FORCES.—GASCONADE OF VAUDREUIL.—PLAN OF DEFENCE.—STRENGTH OF MONTREAL.—ADVANCE OF WOLFE —BRITISH SAILORS.—LANDING OF THE ENGLISH.—DIFFICULTIES BEFORE THEM —STORM.—FIRESHIPS.—CONFIDENCE OF FRENCH COMMANDERS.—WOLFE OCCUPIES POINT LEVI —A FUTILE NIGHT ATTACK.—QUEBEC BOMBARDED.—WOLFE AT THE MONTMORENCI.—SKIRMISHES.—DANGER OF THE ENGLISH POSITION.—EFFECTS OF THE BOMBARDMENT.—DESSERTION OF CANADIANS.—THE ENGLISH ABOVE QUEBEC.—SEVERITIES OF WOLFE.—ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO BURN THE FLEET —DESPERATE ENTERPRISE OF WOLFE.—THE HEIGHTS OF MONTMORENCI.—REPULSE OF THE ENGLISH.

IN early spring the chiefs of Canada met at Montreal to settle a plan of defence. What at first they most dreaded was an advance of the enemy by way of Lake Champlain. Bourlamaque, with three battalions, was ordered to take post at Ticonderoga, hold it if he could, or, if overborne by numbers, fall back to Isle-aux-Noix, at the outlet of the lake. La Corne was sent with a strong detachment to intrench himself at the head of the rapids of the St. Lawrence, and oppose any hostile movement from Lake Ontario. Every able-bodied man in the colony, and every boy who could fire a gun, was to be called to the field.

Vaudreuil sent a circular letter to the militia captains of all the parishes, with orders to read it to the parishioners. It exhorted them to defend their religion, their wives, their children, and their goods from the fury of the heretics; declared that he, the governor, would never yield up Canada on any terms whatever; and ordered them to join the army at once, leaving none behind but the old, the sick, the women, and the children.¹ The bishop issued a pastoral mandate: "On every side, dearest brethren, the enemy is making immense preparations. His forces, at least six times more numerous than ours, are already in motion. Never was Canada in a state so critical and full of peril. Never were we so destitute, or threatened with an attack so fierce, so general, and so obstinate. Now, in truth, we may say, more than ever before, that our only resource is in the powerful succor of our Lord. Then, dearest brethren, make every effort to deserve it. 'Seek first the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.' " And he reproves their sins, exhorts them to repentance, and ordains processions, masses, and prayers.²

Vaudreuil bustled and boasted. In May he wrote to the minister: "The zeal with which I am animated for the service of the King will always make me

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1740-1760

² I am indebted for a copy of this mandate to the kindness of Abbé Bois. As printed by Knox, it is somewhat different, though the spirit is the same.

surmount the greatest obstacles. I am taking the most proper measures to give the enemy a good reception whenever he may attack us. I keep in view the defence of Quebec. I have given orders in the parishes below to muster the inhabitants who are able to bear arms, and place women, children, cattle, and even hay and grain, in places of safety. Permit me, Monseigneur, to beg you to have the goodness to assure His Majesty that, to whatever hard extremity I may be reduced, my zeal will be equally ardent and indefatigable, and that I shall do the impossible to prevent our enemies from making progress in any direction, or, at least, to make them pay extremely dear for it.”¹ Then he writes again to say that Amherst with a great army will, as he learns, attack Ticonderoga; that Bradstreet, with six thousand men, will advance to Lake Ontario; and that six thousand more will march to the Ohio. “Whatever progress they may make,” he adds, “I am resolved to yield them nothing, but hold my ground even to annihilation.” He promises to do his best to keep on good terms with Montcalm, and ends with a warm eulogy of Bigot.²

It was in the midst of all these preparations that Bougainville arrived from France with news that a great fleet was on its way to attack Quebec. The town was filled with consternation mixed with surprise, for the Canadians had believed that the dangerous navigation of the St. Lawrence would deter their enemies from the attempt. "Everybody," writes one of them, "was stupefied at an enterprise that seemed so bold." In a few days a crowd of sails was seen approaching. They were not enemies, but friends. It was the fleet of the contractor Cadet, commanded by an officer named Kanon, and loaded with supplies for the colony. They anchored in the harbor, eighteen sail in all, and their arrival spread universal joy. Admiral Durell had come too late to intercept them, catching but three stragglers that had lagged behind the rest. Still others succeeded in eluding him, and before the first of June five more ships had come safely into port.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Mai, 1759.

² Ibid., 20 [?] Mai, 1759.

When the news brought by Bougainville reached Montreal, nearly the whole force of the colony, except the detachments of Bourslamaque and La Corne, was ordered to Quebec. Montcalm hastened thither, and Vaudreuil followed. The governor-general wrote to the minister in his usual strain, as if all the hope of Canada rested in him. Such, he says, was his activity, that, though very busy, he reached Quebec only a day and a half after Montcalm, and, on arriving, learned from his scouts that English ships-of-war had already appeared at Isle-aux-Coudres. These were the squadron of Durell. "I expect," Vaudreuil goes on, "to be sharply attacked, and that our enemies will make their most powerful efforts to conquer this colony; but there is no ruse, no resource, no means which my zeal does not suggest to lay snares for them, and finally, when the exigency demands it, to fight them with an ardor, and even a fury, which exceeds the range of their ambitious designs. The troops, the Canadians, and the Indians are not ignorant of the resolution I have taken, and from which I shall not recoil under any circumstance whatever. The burghers of this city have already put their goods and furniture in places of safety. The old men, women, and children hold themselves ready to leave town. My firmness is generally applauded. It has penetrated every heart; and each man says aloud: 'Canada, our native land, shall bury us under its ruins before we surrender to the English!' This is decidedly my own determination, and I shall hold to it inviolably." He launches into high praise of the contractor Cadet, whose zeal for the service of the King and the defence of the colony he declares to be triumphant over every difficulty. It is necessary, he adds, that ample supplies of all kinds should be sent out in the autumn, with the distribution of which Cadet offers to charge himself, and to account for them at their first cost; but he does not say what prices his disinterested friend will compel the destitute Canadians to pay for them.¹

Five battalions from France, nearly all the colony troops, and the militia from every part of Canada poured into Quebec, along with a thousand or more Indians, who, at the call of Vaudreuil, came to lend their scalping-knives to the defence. Such was the ardor of the people that boys of fifteen and men of eighty were to be seen in the camp. Isle-aux-Coudres and Isle d'Orléans were ordered to be evacuated, and an excited crowd on the rock of Quebec watched hourly for the approaching fleet. Days passed and weeks passed, yet it did not appear. Meanwhile Vaudreuil held council after council to settle a plan of defence. They were strange scenes: a crowd of officers of every rank, mixed pell-mell in a small room, pushing, shouting, elbowing each other, interrupting each other; till Montcalm, in despair, took each aside after the meeting was over, and made him give his opinion in writing.¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 28 Mai, 1759.

SIEGE OF QUEBEC

1759.

He himself had at first proposed to encamp the army on the plains of Abraham and the meadows of the St. Charles, making that river his line of defence;² but he changed his plan, and, with the concurrence of Vaudreuil, resolved to post his whole force on the St. Lawrence below the city, with his right resting on the St. Charles, and his left on the Montmorenci. Here, accordingly, the troops and militia were stationed as they arrived. Early in June, standing at the northeastern brink of the rock of Quebec, one could have seen the whole position at a glance. On the curving shore from the St. Charles to the rocky gorge of the Montmorenci, a distance of seven or eight miles, the whitewashed dwellings of the parish of Beauport stretched down the road in a double chain, and the fields on both sides were studded with tents, huts, and Indian wigwams. Along the borders of the St. Lawrence, as far as the eye could distinguish them, gangs of men were throwing up redoubts, batteries, and lines of intrenchment. About midway between the two extremities of the encampment ran the little river of Beauport; and on the rising ground just beyond it stood a large stone house, round which the tents were thickly clustered; for here Montcalm had made his headquarters.

¹ Journal du Siège de Québec déposé à la Bibliothèque de Hartwell, en Angleterre (Printed at Quebec, 1836)

² Livre d'Ordres, Disposition pour s'opposer à la Descente.

A boom of logs chained together was drawn across the mouth of the St. Charles, which was further guarded by two hulks mounted with cannon. The bridge of boats that crossed the stream nearly a mile above formed the chief communication between the city and the camp. Its head towards Beauport was protected by a strong and extensive earthwork; and the banks of the stream on the Quebec side were also intrenched, to form a second line of defence in case the position at Beauport should be forced.

In the city itself every gate, except the Palace Gate, which gave access to the bridge, was closed and barricaded. A hundred and six cannon were mounted on the walls.¹ A floating battery of twelve heavy pieces, a number of gunboats, eight fireships, and several firerafts formed the river defences. The largest merchantmen of Kanon's fleet were sacrificed to make the fireships; and the rest, along with the frigates that came with them, were sent for safety up the St. Lawrence beyond the river Richelieu, whence about a thousand of their sailors returned to man the batteries and gunboats.

¹ This number was found after the siege. Knox, ii. 161. Some French writers make it much greater.

In the camps along the Beauport shore were about fourteen thousand men, besides Indians. The regulars held the centre; the militia of Quebec and Three Rivers were on the right, and those of Montreal on the left. In Quebec itself there was a garrison of between one and two thousand men under the Chevalier de Ramesay. Thus the whole number, including Indians, amounted to more than sixteen thousand;¹ and though the Canadians who formed the greater part of it were of little use in the open field, they could be trusted to fight well behind intrenchments. Against this force, posted behind defensive works, on positions almost impregnable by nature, Wolfe brought less than nine thousand men available for operations on land.² The steep and lofty heights that lined the river made the cannon of the ships for the most part useless, while the exigencies of the naval service forbade employing the sailors on shore. In two or three instances only, throughout the siege, small squads of them landed to aid in moving and working cannon; and the actual fighting fell to the troops alone.

Vaudreuil and Bigot took up their quarters with the army. The governor-general had delegated the command of the land-forces to Montcalm, whom, in his own words, he authorized "to give orders everywhere, provisionally." His relations with him were more than ever anomalous and critical; for while Vaudreuil, in virtue of his office, had a right to supreme command, Montcalm, now a lieutenant-general, held a military grade far above him; and the governor, while always writing himself down in his despatches as the head and front of every movement, had too little self-confidence not to leave the actual command in the hands of his rival.

¹ See Appendix, H

² Ibid.

Days and weeks wore on, and the first excitement gave way to restless impatience. Why did not the English come? Many of the Canadians thought that Heaven would interpose and wreck the English fleet, as it had wrecked that of Admiral Walker half a century before. There were processions, prayers, and vows towards this happy consummation. Food was scarce. Bigot and Cadet lived in luxury; fowls by thousands were fattened with wheat for their tables, while the people were put on rations of two ounces of bread a day.¹ Durell and his ships were reported to be still at Isle-aux-Coudres. Vaudreuil sent thither a party of Canadians, and they captured three midshipmen, who, says Montcalm, had gone ashore pour polissonner, that is, on a lark. These youths were brought to Quebec, where they increased the general anxiety by grossly exaggerating the English force.

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

At length it became known that eight English vessels were anchored in the north channel of Orleans, and on the twenty-first of June the masts of three of them could plainly be seen. One of the fireships was consumed in a vain attempt to burn them, and several firerafts and a sort of infernal machine were tried with no better success; the unwelcome visitors still held their posts.

Meanwhile the whole English fleet had slowly advanced, piloted by Denis de Vitré, a Canadian of good birth, captured at sea some time before, and now compelled to serve, under a threat of being hanged if he refused.¹ Nor was he alone; for when Durell reached the place where the river pilots were usually taken on board, he raised a French flag to his mast-head, causing great rejoicings among the Canadians on shore, who thought that a fleet was come to their rescue, and that their country was saved. The pilots launched their canoes and came out to the ships, where they were all made prisoners; then the French flag was lowered, and the red cross displayed in its stead. The spectators on shore turned from joy to despair; and a priest who stood watching the squadron with a telescope is said to have dropped dead with the revulsion of feeling.

Towards the end of June the main fleet was near the mountain of Cape Tourmente. The passage called the Traverse, between the Cape and the lower end of the Island of Orleans, was reputed one of the most dangerous parts of the St. Lawrence; and as the ships successively came up, the captive pilots were put on board to carry them safely through, on pain of death. One of these men was assigned to the transport "Goodwill," in which was Captain Knox, who spoke French, and who reports thus in his Diary: "He gasconaded at a most extravagant rate, and gave us to understand that it was much against his will that he was become an English pilot. The poor fellow assumed great latitude in his conversation, and said 'he made no doubt that some of the fleet would return to England, but they should have a dismal tale to carry with them; for Canada should be the grave of the whole army, and he expected in a short time to see the walls of Quebec ornamented with English scalps.' Had it not been in obedience to the Admiral, who gave orders that he should not be ill-used, he would certainly have been thrown overboard." The master of the transport was an old sailor named Killick, who despised the whole Gallic race, and had no mind to see his ship in charge of a Frenchman. "He would not let the pilot speak," continues Knox, "but fixed his mate at the helm, charged him not to take orders from any person but himself, and going forward with his trumpet to the forecastle, gave the necessary instructions. All that could be said by the commanding officer and the other gentlemen on board was to no purpose; the pilot declared we should be lost, for that no French ship ever presumed to pass there without a pilot.

¹ Mémorial de Jean-Denis de Vitré au Très-honorable William Pitt.

'Ay, ay, my dear,' replied our son of Neptune, 'but, damn me, I'll convince you that an Englishman shall go where a Frenchman dare not show his nose.' The 'Richmond' frigate being close astern of us, the commanding officer called out to the captain and told him our case; he inquired who the master was, and was answered from the forecabin by the man himself, who told him 'he was old Killbeck, and that was enough.' I went forward with this experienced mariner, who pointed out the channel to me as we passed; showing me by the ripple and color of the water where there was any danger, and distinguishing the places where there were ledges of rocks (to me invisible) from banks of sand, mud, or gravel. He gave his orders with great unconcern, joked with the sounding-boats which lay off on each side with different colored flags for our guidance; and when any of them called to him and pointed to the deepest water, he answered: 'Ay, ay, my dear, chalk it down, a damned dangerous navigation, eh! If you don't make a sputter about it you'll get no credit in England.' After we had cleared this remarkable place, where the channel forms a complete zigzag, the master called to his mate to give the helm to somebody else, saying, 'Damn me if there are not a thousand places in the Thames fifty times more hazardous than this; I am ashamed that Englishmen should make such a rout about it.' The Frenchman asked me if the captain had not been there before. I assured him in the negative; upon which he viewed him with great attention, lifting at the same time his hands and eyes to heaven with astonishment and fervency." ¹ Vaudreuil was blamed for not planting cannon at a certain plateau on the side of the mountain of Capo Tourmente, where the gunners would have been inaccessible, and whence they could have battered every passing ship with a plunging fire. As it was, the whole fleet sailed safely through. On the twenty-sixth they were all anchored off the south shore of the Island of Orleans, a few miles from Quebec; and, writes Knox, "here we are entertained with a most agreeable prospect of a delightful country on every side; windmills, watermills, churches, chapels, and compact farmhouses, all built with stone, and covered, some with wood, and others with straw. The lands appear to be everywhere well cultivated; and with the help of my glass I can discern that they are sowed with flax, wheat, barley, peas, etc., and the grounds are enclosed with wooden pales. The weather to-day is agreeably warm. A light fog sometimes hangs over the highlands, but in the river we have a fine clear air. In the curve of the river, while we were under sail, we had a transient view of a stupendous natural curiosity called the waterfall of Montmorenci."

¹ Others, as well as the pilot, were astonished. "The enemy passed sixty ships of war where we hardly dared risk a vessel of a hundred tons." "Notwithstanding all our precautions, the English, without any accident, by night, as well as by day, passed through it [the Traverse] their ships of seventy and eighty guns, and even many of them together." Vaudreuil au Ministre, 22 Octobre, 1759.

That night Lieutenant Meech, with forty New England rangers, landed on the Island of Orleans, and found a body of armed inhabitants, who tried to surround him. He beat them off, and took possession of a neighboring farmhouse, where he remained till daylight; then pursued the enemy, and found that they had crossed to the north shore. The whole army now landed, and were drawn up on the beach. As they were kept there for some time, Knox and several brother officers went to visit the neighboring church of St. Laurent, where they found a letter from the parish priest, directed to "The Worthy Officers of the British Army," praying that they would protect the sacred edifice, and also his own adjoining house, and adding, with somewhat needless civility, that he wished they had come sooner, that they might have enjoyed the asparagus and radishes of his garden, now unhappily going to seed. The letter concluded with many compliments and good wishes, in which the Britons to whom they were addressed saw only "the frothy politeness so peculiar to the French." The army marched westward and encamped. Wolfe, with his chief engineer, Major Mackellar, and an escort of light infantry, advanced to the extreme point of the island.

Here he could see, in part, the desperate nature of the task he had undertaken. Before him, three or four miles away, Quebec sat perched upon her rock, a congregation of stone houses, churches, palaces, convents, and hospitals; the green trees of the Seminary garden and the spires of the Cathedral, the Ursulines, the Récollets, and the Jesuits. Beyond rose the loftier height of Cape Diamond, edged with palisades and capped with redoubt and parapet. Batteries frowned everywhere, the Château battery, the Clergy battery, the Hospital battery, on the rock above, and the Royal, Dauphin's, and Queen's batteries on the strand, where the dwellings and warehouses of the lower town clustered beneath the cliff.

Full in sight lay the far-extended camp of Montcalm, stretching from the St. Charles, beneath the city walls, to the chasm and cataract of the Montmorenci. From the cataract to the river of Beauport, its front was covered by earthworks along the brink of abrupt and lofty heights; and from the river of Beauport to the St. Charles, by broad flats of mud swept by the fire of redoubts, intrenchments, a floating battery, and the city itself. Above the city, Cape Diamond hid the view; but could Wolfe have looked beyond it, he would have beheld a prospect still more disheartening. Here, mile after mile, the St. Lawrence was walled by a range of steeps, often inaccessible, and always so difficult that a few men at the top could hold an army in check; while at Cap-Rouge, about eight miles distant, the high plateau was cleft by the channel of a stream which formed a line of defence as strong as that of the Montmorenci. Quebec was a natural fortress. Bougainville had long before examined the position, and reported that "by the help of intrenchments, easily and quickly made, and defended by three or four thousand men, I think the city would be safe. I do not believe that the English will make any attempt against it; but they may have the madness to do so, and it is well to be prepared against surprise."

Not four thousand men, but four times four thousand, now stood in its defence; and their chiefs wisely resolved not to throw away the advantages of their position. Nothing more was heard of Vaudreuil's bold plan of attacking the invaders at their landing, and Montcalm had declared that he would play the part, not of Hannibal, but of Fabius. His plan was to avoid a general battle, run no risks, and protract the defence till the resources of the enemy were exhausted, or till approaching winter forced them to withdraw. Success was almost certain but for one contingency. Amherst, with a force larger than that of Wolfe, was moving against Ticonderoga. If he should capture it, and advance into the colony, Montcalm would be forced to weaken his army by sending strong detachments to oppose him. Here was Wolfe's best hope. This failing, his only chance was in audacity. The game was desperate; but, intrepid gamester as he was in war, he was a man, in the last resort, to stake everything on the cast of the dice.

The elements declared for France. On the afternoon of the day when Wolfe's army landed, a violent squall swept over the St. Lawrence, dashed the ships together, drove several ashore, and destroyed many of the flat-boats from which the troops had just disembarked. "I never saw so much distress among shipping in my whole life," writes an officer to a friend in Boston. Fortunately the storm subsided as quickly as it rose. Vaudreuil saw that the hoped-for deliverance had failed; and as the tempest had not destroyed the British fleet, he resolved to try the virtue of his fireships. "I am afraid," says Montcalm, "that they have cost us a million, and will be good for nothing after all." This remained to be seen. Vaudreuil gave the chief command of them to a naval officer named Delouche; and on the evening of the twenty-eighth, after long consultation and much debate among their respective captains, they set sail together at ten o'clock. The night was moonless and dark. In less than an hour they were at the entrance of the north channel. Delouche had been all enthusiasm; but as he neared the danger his nerves failed, and he set fire to his ship half an hour too soon, the rest following his example.¹

There was an English outpost at the Point of Orleans; and, about eleven o'clock, the sentries descried through the gloom the ghostly outlines of the approaching ships. As they gazed, these mysterious strangers began to dart tongues of flame; fire ran like lightning up their masts and sails, and then they burst out like volcanoes. Filled as they were with pitch, tar, and every manner of combustible, mixed with fireworks, bombs, grenades, and old cannon, swivels, and muskets loaded to the throat, the effect was terrific. The troops at the Point, amazed at the sudden eruption, the din of the explosions, and the showers of grapeshot that rattled among the trees, lost their wits and fled. The blazing dragons hissed and roared, spouted sheets of fire, vomited smoke in black, pitchy volumes and vast illumined clouds, and shed their infernal glare on the distant city, the tents of Montcalm, and the long red lines of the British army, drawn up in array of battle, lest the French should cross from their encampments to attack them in the confusion. Knox calls the display "the grandest fireworks that can possibly be conceived." Yet the fireships did no other harm than burning alive one of their own captains and six or seven of his sailors who failed to escape in their boats. Some of them ran ashore before reaching the fleet; the others were seized by the intrepid English sailors, who, approaching in their boats, threw grappling-irons upon them and towed them towards land, till they swung round and stranded. Here, after venting their fury for a while, they subsided into quiet conflagration, which lasted till morning. Vaudreuil watched the result of his experiment from the steeple of the church at Beauport; then returned, dejected, to Quebec.

¹ Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759. Journal du Siége (Bibliothèque de Hartwell).

Wolfe longed to fight his enemy; but his sagacious enemy would not gratify him. From the heights of Beauport, the rock of Quebec, or the summit of Cape Diamond, Montcalm could look down on the river and its shores as on a map, and watch each movement of the invaders. He was hopeful, perhaps confident; and for a month or more he wrote almost daily to Bourlamaque at Ticonderoga, in a cheerful, and often a jocose vein, mingling orders and instructions with pleasantries and bits of news. Yet his vigilance was unceasing. "We pass every night in bivouac, or else sleep in our clothes. Perhaps you are doing as much, my dear Bourlamaque."¹

Of the two commanders, Vaudreuil was the more sanguine, and professed full faith that all would go well. He too corresponded with Bourlamaque, to whom he gave his opinion, founded on the reports of deserters, that Wolfe had no chance of success unless Amherst should come to his aid. This he pronounced impossible; and he expressed a strong desire that the English would attack him, "so that we may rid ourselves of them at once."² He was courageous, except in the immediate presence of danger, and failed only when the crisis came.

Wolfe, held in check at every other point, had one movement in his power. He could seize the heights of Point Levi, opposite the city; and this, along with his occupation of the Island of Orleans, would give him command of the Basin of Quebec. Thence also he could fire on the place across the St. Lawrence, which is here less than a mile wide. The movement was begun on the afternoon of the twenty-ninth, when, shivering in a north wind and a sharp frost, a part of Monckton's brigade was ferried over to Beaumont, on the south shore, and the rest followed in the morning. The rangers had a brush with a party of Canadians, whom they drove off, and the regulars then landed unopposed. Monckton ordered a proclamation, signed by Wolfe, to be posted on the door of the parish church. It called on the Canadians, in peremptory terms, to stand neutral in the contest, promised them, if they did so, full protection in property and religion, and threatened that, if they presumed to resist the invaders, their houses, goods, and harvests should be destroyed, and their churches despoiled. As soon as the troops were out of sight the inhabitants took down the placard and carried it to Vaudreuil.

¹ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 27 Juin, 1759. All these letters are before me

² Vaudreuil à Bourlamaque, 8 Juillet, 1759

The brigade marched along the river road to Point Levi, drove off a body of French and Indians posted in the church, and took possession of the houses and the surrounding heights. In the morning they were intrenching themselves, when they were greeted by a brisk fire from the edge of the woods. It came from a party of Indians, whom the rangers presently put to flight, and, imitating their own ferocity, scalped nine of them. Wolfe came over to the camp on the next day, went with an escort to the heights opposite Quebec, examined it with a spy-glass, and chose a position from which to bombard it. Cannon and mortars were brought ashore, fascines and gabions made, intrenchments thrown up, and batteries planted. Knox came over from the main camp, and says that he had "a most agreeable view of the city of Quebec. It is a very fair object for our artillery, particularly the lower town." But why did Wolfe wish to bombard it? Its fortifications were but little exposed to his fire, and to knock its houses, convents, and churches to pieces would bring him no nearer to his object. His guns at Point Levi could destroy the city, but could not capture it; yet doubtless they would have good moral effect, discourage the French, and cheer his own soldiers with the flattering belief that they were achieving something.

The guns of Quebec showered balls and bombs upon his workmen; but they still toiled on, and the French saw the fatal batteries fast growing to completion. The citizens, alarmed at the threatened destruction, begged the governor for leave to cross the river and dislodge their assailants. At length he consented. A party of twelve or fifteen hundred was made up of armed burghers, Canadians from the camp, a few Indians, some pupils of the Seminary, and about a hundred volunteers from the regulars. Dumas, an experienced officer, took command of them; and, going up to Sillery, they crossed the river on the night of the twelfth of July. They had hardly climbed the heights of the south shore when they grew exceedingly nervous, though the enemy was still three miles off. The Seminary scholars fired on some of their own party, whom they mistook for English; and the same mishap was repeated a second and a third time. A panic seized the whole body, and Dumas could not control them. They turned and made for their canoes, rolling over each other as they rushed down the heights, and reappeared at Quebec at six in the morning, overwhelmed with despair and shame.¹

The presentiment of the unhappy burghers proved too true. The English batteries fell to their work, and the families of the town fled to the country for safety. In a single day eighteen houses and the cathedral were burned by exploding shells; and fiercer and fiercer the storm of fire and iron hailed upon Quebec.

Wolfe did not rest content with distressing his enemy. With an ardor and a daring that no difficulties could cool, he sought means to strike an effective blow. It was nothing to lay Quebec in ruins if he could not defeat the army that protected it. To land from boats and attack Montcalm in front, through the mud of the Beauport flats or up the heights along the neighboring shore, was an enterprise too rash even for his temerity. It might, however, be possible to land below the cataract of Montmorenci, cross that stream higher up, and strike the French army in flank or rear; and he had no sooner secured his positions at the points of Levi and Orleans, than he addressed himself to this attempt.

¹ Événements de la Guerre en Canada (Hist Soc Quebec, 1861). Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760 Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759. L'Abeille, n. No. 14 (a publication of the Quebec Seminary). Journal du Siège de Quebec (Bibliothèque de Hartwell). Panet, Journal du Siège Foligny, Journal mémoratif Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec, by John Johnson, Clerk and Quartermaster-Sergeant to the Fifty-eighth Regiment.

On the eighth several frigates and a bomb-ketch took their stations before the camp of the Chevalier de Lévis, who, with his division of Canadian militia, occupied the heights along the St. Lawrence just above the cataract. Here they shelled and cannonaded him all day; though, from his elevated position, with very little effect. Towards evening the troops on the Point of Orleans broke up their camp. Major Hardy, with a detachment of marines, was left to hold that post, while the rest embarked at night in the boats of the fleet. They were the brigades of Townshend and Murray, consisting of five battalions, with a body of grenadiers, light infantry, and rangers, — in all three thousand men. They landed before daybreak in front of the parish of L'Ange Gardien, a little below the cataract. The only opposition was from a troop of Canadians and Indians, whom they routed, after some loss, climbed the heights, gained the plateau above, and began to intrench themselves. A company of rangers, supported by detachments of regulars, was sent into the neighboring forest to protect the parties who were cutting fascines, and apparently, also, to look for a fording-place.

Lévis, with his Scotch-Jacobite aide-de-camp, Johnstone, had watched the movements of Wolfe from the heights across the cataract. Johnstone says that he asked his commander if he was sure there was no ford higher up on the Montmorenci, by which the English could cross. Lévis averred that there was none, and that he himself had examined the stream to its source; on which a Canadian who stood by whispered to the aide-de-camp: "The general is mistaken; there is a ford." Johnstone told this to Lévis, who would not believe it, and so browbeat the Canadian that he dared not repeat what he had said. Johnstone, taking him aside, told him to go and find somebody who had lately crossed the ford, and bring him at once to the general's quarters; whereupon he soon reappeared with a man who affirmed that he had crossed it the night before with a sack of wheat on his back. A detachment was immediately sent to the place, with orders to intrench itself, and Repentigny, lieutenant of Lévis, was posted not far off with eleven hundred Canadians.

Four hundred Indians passed the ford under the partisan Langlade, discovered Wolfe's detachment, hid themselves, and sent their commander to tell Repentigny that there was a body of English in the forest, who might all be destroyed if he would come over at once with his Canadians. Repentigny sent for orders to Lévis, and Lévis sent for orders to Vaudreuil, whose quarters were three or four miles distant. Vaudreuil answered that no risk should be run, and that he would come and see to the matter himself. It was about two hours before he arrived; and meanwhile the Indians grew impatient, rose from their hiding-place, fired on the rangers, and drove them back with heavy loss upon the regulars, who stood their ground, and at last repulsed the assailants. The Indians recrossed the ford with thirty-six scalps. If Repentigny had advanced, and Lévis had followed with his main body, the consequences to the English might have been serious; for, as Johnstone remarks, "a Canadian in the woods is worth three disciplined soldiers, as a soldier in a plain is worth three Canadians." Vaudreuil called a council of war. The question was whether an effort should be made to dislodge Wolfe's main force. Montcalm and the governor were this time of one mind, and both thought it inexpedient to attack, with militia, a body of regular troops whose numbers and position were imperfectly known. Bigot gave his voice for the attack. He was overruled, and Wolfe was left to fortify himself in peace.¹

His occupation of the heights of Montmorenci

¹ The above is from a comparison of the rather discordant accounts of Johnstone, the Journal tenu à l'Armée, the Journal of Panet, and that of the Hartwell Library. The last says that Lévis crossed the Montmorenci. If so, he accomplished nothing. This affair should not be confounded with a somewhat similar one which took place on the twenty-sixth.

exposed him to great risks. The left wing of his army at Point Levi was six miles from its right wing at the cataract, and Major Hardy's detachment on the Point of Orleans was between them, separated from each by a wide arm of the St. Lawrence. Any one of the three camps might be overpowered before the others could support it; and Hardy with his small force was above all in danger of being cut to pieces. But the French kept persistently on the defensive; and after the failure of Dumas to dislodge the English from Point Levi, Vaudreuil would not hear of another such attempt. Wolfe was soon well intrenched; but it was easier to defend himself than to strike at his enemy. Montcalm, when urged to attack him, is said to have answered: "Let him amuse himself where he is. If we drive him off, he may go to some place where he can do us harm." His late movement, however, had a discouraging effect on the Canadians, who now for the first time began to desert. His batteries, too, played across the chasm of Montmorenci upon the left wing of the French army with an effect extremely annoying.

The position of the hostile forces was a remarkable one. They were separated by the vast gorge that opens upon the St. Lawrence; an amphitheatre of lofty precipices, their brows crested with forests, and their steep brown sides scantily feathered with stunted birch and fir. Into this abyss leaps the Montmorenci with one headlong plunge of nearly two hundred and fifty feet, a living column of snowy white, with its spray, its foam, its mists, and its rainbows, then spreads itself in broad, thin sheets over a floor of rock and gravel, and creeps tamely to the St. Lawrence. It was but a gunshot across the gulf, and the sentinels on each side watched each other over the roar and turmoil of the cataract. Captain Knox, coming one day from Point Levi to receive orders from Wolfe, improved a spare hour to visit this marvel of nature. "I had very nigh paid dear for my inquisitiveness; for while I stood on the eminence I was hastily called to by one of our sentinels, when, throwing my eyes about, I saw a Frenchman creeping under the eastern extremity of their breastwork to fire at me. This obliged me to retire as fast as I could out of his reach, and, making up to the sentry to thank him for his attention, he told me the fellow had snapped his piece twice, and the second time it flashed in the pan at the instant I turned away from the Fall." Another officer, less fortunate, had a leg broken by a shot from the opposite cliffs.

Day after day went by, and the invaders made no progress. Flags of truce passed often between the hostile camps. "You will demolish the town, no doubt," said the bearer of one of them, "but you shall never get inside of it." To which Wolfe replied: "I will have Quebec if I stay here till the end of November." Sometimes the heat was intense, and sometimes there were floods of summer rain that inundated the tents. Along the river, from the Montmorenci to Point Levi, there were ceaseless artillery fights between gunboats, frigates, and batteries on shore. Bands of Indians infested the outskirts of the camps, killing sentries and patrols. The rangers chased them through the woods; there were brisk skirmishes, and scalps lost and won. Sometimes the regulars took part in these forest battles; and once it was announced, in orders of the day, that "the General has ordered two sheep and some rum to Captain Cosnan's company of grenadiers for the spirit they showed this morning in pushing those scoundrels of Indians." The Indians complained that the British soldiers were learning how to fight, and no longer stood still in a mass to be shot at, as in Braddock's time. The Canadian coureurs de bois mixed with their red allies and wore their livery. One of them was caught on the eighteenth. He was naked, daubed red and blue, and adorned with a bunch of painted feathers dangling from the top of his head. He and his companions used the scalping-knife as freely as the Indians themselves; nor were the New England rangers much behind them in this respect, till an order came from Wolfe forbidding "the inhuman practice of scalping, except when the enemy are Indians, or Canadians dressed like Indians."

A part of the fleet worked up into the Basin, beyond the Point of Orleans; and here, on the warm summer nights, officers and men watched the cannon flashing and thundering from the heights of Montmorenci on one side, and those of Point Levi on the other, and the bombs sailing through the air in fiery semi-circles. Often the gloom was lighted up by the blaze of the burning houses of Quebec, kindled by incendiary shells. Both the lower and the upper town were nearly deserted by the inhabitants, some retreating into the country, and some into the suburb of St. Roch; while the Ursulines and Hospital nuns abandoned their convents to seek harborage beyond the range of shot. The city was a prey to robbers, who pillaged the empty houses, till an order came from headquarters promising the gallows to all who should be caught. News reached the French that Niagara was attacked, and that the army of Amherst was moving against Ticonderoga. The Canadians deserted more and more. They were disheartened by the defensive attitude in which both Vaudreuil and Montcalm steadily persisted; and accustomed as they were to rapid raids, sudden strokes, and a quick return to their homes, they tired of long weeks of inaction. The English patrols caught one of them as he was passing the time in fishing. "He seemed to be a subtle old rogue," says Knox, "of seventy years of age, as he told us. We plied him well with port wine, and then his heart was more open; and seeing that we laughed at the exaggerated accounts he had given us, he said he 'wished the affair was well over, one way or the other; that his countrymen were all discontented, and would either surrender, or disperse and act a neutral part, if it were not for the persuasions of their priests and the fear of being maltreated by the savages, with whom they are threatened on all occasions.' " A deserter reported on the nineteenth of July that nothing but dread of the Indians kept the Canadians in the camp.

Wolfe's proclamation, at first unavailing, was now taking effect. A large number of Canadian prisoners, brought in on the twenty-fifth, declared that their countrymen would gladly accept his offers but for the threats of their commanders that if they did so the Indians should be set upon them. The prisoners said further that "they had been under apprehension for several days past of having a body of four hundred barbarians sent to rifle their parish and habitations."¹ Such threats were not wholly effectual. A French chronicler of the time says: "The Canadians showed their disgust every day, and deserted at every opportunity, in spite of the means taken to prevent them." "The people were intimidated, seeing all our army kept in one body and solely on the defensive; while the English, though far less numerous, divided their forces, and undertook various bold enterprises without meeting resistance."²

On the eighteenth the English accomplished a feat which promised important results. The French commanders had thought it impossible for any hostile ship to pass the batteries of Quebec; but about eleven o'clock at night, favored by the wind, and covered by a furious cannonade from Point Levi, the ship "Sutherland," with a frigate and several small vessels, sailed safely by and reached the river above the town. Here they at once attacked and destroyed a fireship and some small craft that they found there. Now, for the first time, it became necessary for Montcalm to weaken his army at Beauport by sending six hundred men, under Dumas, to defend the accessible points in the line of precipices between Quebec and Cap-Rouge. Several hundred more were sent on the next day, when it became known that the English had dragged a fleet of boats over Point Levi, launched them above the town, and despatched troops to embark in them. Thus a new feature was introduced into the siege operations, and danger had risen on a side where the French thought themselves safe. On the other hand, Wolfe had become more vulnerable than ever. His army was now divided, not into three parts, but into four, each so far from the rest that, in case of sudden attack, it must defend itself alone. That Montcalm did not improve his opportunity was apparently due to want of confidence in his militia.

¹ Knox, i 347; compare pp 339, 341, 346

² Journal du Siège (Bibliothèque de Hartwell).

The force above the town did not lie idle. On the night of the twentieth, Colonel Carleton, with six hundred men, rowed eighteen miles up the river, and landed at Pointe-aux-Trembles, on the north shore. Here some of the families of Quebec had sought asylum; and Wolfe had been told by prisoners that not only were stores in great quantity to be found here, but also letters and papers throwing light on the French plans. Carleton and his men drove off a band of Indians who fired on them, and spent a quiet day around the parish church, but found few papers, and still fewer stores. They withdrew towards evening, carrying with them nearly a hundred women, children, and old men; and they were no sooner gone than the Indians returned to plunder the empty houses of their unfortunate allies. The prisoners were treated with great kindness. The ladies among them were entertained at supper by Wolfe, who jested with them on the caution of the French generals, saying: "I have given good chances to attack me, and am surprised that they have not profited by them."¹ On the next day the prisoners were all sent to Quebec under a flag of truce.

Thus far Wolfe had refrained from executing the threats he had affixed the month before to the church of Beaumont. But now he issued another proclamation. It declared that the Canadians had shown themselves unworthy of the offers he had made them, and that he had therefore ordered his light troops to ravage their country and bring them prisoners to his camp. Such of the Canadian militia as belonged to the parishes near Quebec were now in a sad dilemma; for Montcalm threatened them on one side, and Wolfe, on the other. They might desert to their homes, or they might stand by their colors; in the one case their houses were to be burned by French savages, and in the other by British light infantry.

¹ Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm.

Wolfe at once gave orders in accord with his late proclamation; but he commanded that no church should be profaned, and no woman or child injured. The first effects of his stern policy are thus recorded by Knox: "Major Dalling's light infantry brought in this afternoon to our camp two hundred and fifty male and female prisoners. Among this number was a very respectable looking priest, and about forty men fit to bear arms. There was almost an equal number of black cattle, with about seventy sheep and lambs, and a few horses. Brigadier Monckton entertained the reverend father and some other fashionable personages in his tent, and most humanely ordered refreshments to all the rest of the captives; which noble example was followed by the soldiery, who generously crowded about those unhappy people, sharing their provisions, rum, and tobacco with them. They were sent in the evening on board of transports in the river." Again, two days later: "Colonel Fraser's detachment returned this morning, and presented us with more scenes of distress and the dismal consequences of war, by a great number of wretched families, whom they brought in prisoners, with some of their effects, and near three hundred black cattle, sheep, hogs, and horses."

On the next night the attention of the excellent journalist was otherwise engaged. Vaudreuil tried again to burn the English fleet. "Late last night," writes Knox, under date of the twenty-eighth, "the enemy sent down a most formidable fireraft, which consisted of a parcel of schooners, shallops, and stages chained together. It could not be less than a hundred fathoms in length, and was covered with grenades, old swivels, gun and pistol barrels loaded up to their muzzles, and various other inventions and combustable matters. This seemed to be their last attempt against our fleet, which happily miscarried, as before; for our gallant seamen, with their usual expertness, grappled them before they got down above a third part of the Basin, towed them safe to shore, and left them at anchor, continually repeating, All's well. A remarkable expression from some of these intrepid souls to their comrades on this occasion I must not omit, on account of its singular uncouthness; namely: 'Damme, Jack, didst thee ever take hell in tow before?'"

According to a French account, this aquatic infernal machine consisted of seventy rafts, boats, and schooners. Its failure was due to no shortcoming on the part of its conductors; who, under a brave Canadian named Courval, acted with coolness and resolution. Nothing saved the fleet but the courage of the sailors, swarming out in their boats to fight the approaching conflagration.

It was now the end of July. More than half the summer was gone, and Quebec seemed as far as ever beyond the grasp of Wolfe. Its buildings were in ruins, and the neighboring parishes were burned and ravaged; but its living rampart, the army of Montcalm, still lay in patient defiance along the shores of Beauport, while above the city every point where a wildcat could climb the precipices was watched and guarded, and Dumas with a thousand men held the impregnable heights of Cap-Rouge. Montcalm persisted in doing nothing that his enemy wished him to do. He would not fight on Wolfe's terms, and Wolfe resolved at last to fight him on his own; that is, to attack his camp in front.

The plan was desperate; for, after leaving troops enough to hold Point Levi and the heights of Montmorenci, less than five thousand men would be left to attack a position of commanding strength, where Montcalm at an hour's notice could collect twice as many to oppose them. But Wolfe had a boundless trust in the disciplined valor of his soldiers, and an utter scorn of the militia who made the greater part of his enemy's force.

Towards the Montmorenci the borders of the St. Lawrence are, as we have seen, extremely high and steep. At a mile from the gorge of the cataract there is, at high tide, a strand, about the eighth of a mile wide, between the foot of these heights and the river; and beyond this strand the receding tide lays bare a tract of mud nearly half a mile wide. At the edge of the dry ground the French had built a redoubt mounted with cannon, and there were other similar works on the strand a quarter of a mile nearer the cataract. Wolfe could not see from the river that these redoubts were commanded by the musketry of the intrenchments along the brink of the heights above. These intrenchments were so constructed that they swept with cross-fires the whole face of the declivity, which was covered with grass, and was very steep. Wolfe hoped that, if he attacked one of the redoubts, the French would come down to defend it, and so bring on a general engagement; or, if they did not, that he should gain an opportunity of reconnoitring the heights to find some point where they could be stormed with a chance of success.

In front of the gorge of the Montmorenci there was a ford during several hours of low tide, so that troops from the adjoining English camp might cross to co-operate with their comrades landing in boats from Point Levi and the Island of Orleans. On the morning of the thirty-first of July, the tide then being at the flood, the French saw the ship "Centurion," of sixty-four guns, anchor near the Montmorenci and open fire on the redoubts. Then two armed transports, each of fourteen guns, stood in as close as possible to the first redoubt and fired upon it, stranding as the tide went out, till in the afternoon they lay bare upon the mud. At the same time a battery of more than forty heavy pieces, planted on the lofty promontory beyond the Montmorenci, began a furious cannonade upon the flank of the French intrenchments. It did no great harm, however, for the works were protected by a great number of traverses, which stopped the shot; and the Canadians, who manned this part of the lines, held their ground with excellent steadiness.

About eleven o'clock a fleet of boats filled with troops, chiefly from Point Lévi, appeared in the river and hovered off the shore west of the parish church of Beauport, as if meaning to land there. Montcalm was perplexed, doubting whether the real attack was to be made here, or toward the Montmorenci. Hour after hour the boats moved to and fro, to increase his doubts and hide the real design; but he soon became convinced that the camp of Lévis at the Montmorenci was the true object of his enemy; and about two o'clock he went thither, greeted as he rode along the lines by shouts of Vive notre Général! Lévis had already made preparations for defence with his usual skill. His Canadians were reinforced by the battalions of Béarn, Guienne, and Royal Roussillon; and, as the intentions of Wolfe became certain, the right of the camp was nearly abandoned, the main strength of the army being gathered between the river of Beauport and the Montmorenci, where, according to a French writer, there were, towards the end of the afternoon, about twelve thousand men.¹

At half-past five o'clock the tide was out, and the crisis came. The batteries across the Montmorenci, the distant batteries of Point Lévi, the cannon of the "Centurion," and those of the two stranded ships, all opened together with redoubled fury. The French batteries replied; and, amid this deafening roar of artillery, the English boats set their troops ashore at the edge of the broad tract of sedgy mud that the receding river had left bare. At the same time a column of two thousand men was seen, a mile away, moving in perfect order across the Montmorenci ford. The first troops that landed from the boats were thirteen companies of grenadiers and a detachment of Royal Americans. They dashed swiftly forward; while at some distance behind came Monckton's brigade, composed of the fifteenth, or Amherst's regiment, and the seventy-eighth, or Fraser's Highlanders. The day had been fair and warm; but the sky was now thick with clouds, and large raindrops began to fall, the precursors of a summer storm.

¹ Panet, Journal.

With the utmost precipitation, without orders, and without waiting for Monckton's brigade to come up, the grenadiers in front made a rush for the redoubt near the foot of the hill. The French abandoned it; but the assailants had no sooner gained their prize than the thronged heights above blazed with musketry, and a tempest of bullets fell among them. Nothing daunted, they dashed forward again, reserving their fire, and struggling to climb the steep ascent; while, with yells and shouts of Vive le Roi! the troops and Canadians at the top poured upon them a hailstorm of musket-balls and buck-shot, and dead and wounded in numbers rolled together down the slope. At that instant the clouds burst, and the rain fell in torrents. "We could not see halfway down the hill," says the Chevalier Johnstone, who was at this part of the line. Ammunition was wet on both sides, and the grassy steeps became so slippery that it was impossible to climb them. The English say that the storm saved the French; the French, with as much reason, that it saved the English.

The baffled grenadiers drew back into the redoubt. Wolfe saw the madness of persisting, and ordered a retreat. The rain ceased, and troops of Indians came down the heights to scalp the fallen. Some of them ran towards Lieutenant Peyton, of the Royal Americans, as he lay disabled by a musket-shot. With his double-barrelled gun he brought down two of his assailants, when a Highland sergeant snatched him in his arms, dragged him half a mile over the mud-flats, and placed him in one of the boats. A friend of Peyton, Captain Ochterlony, had received a mortal wound, and an Indian would have scalped him but for the generous intrepidity of a soldier of the battalion of Guienne; who, seizing the enraged savage, held him back till several French officers interposed, and had the dying man carried to a place of safety.

The English retreated in good order, after setting fire to the two stranded vessels. Those of the grenadiers and Royal Americans who were left alive rowed for the Point of Orleans; the fifteenth regiment rowed for Point Levi; and the Highlanders, led by Wolfe himself, joined the column from beyond the Montmorenci, placing themselves in its rear as it slowly retired along the flats and across the ford, the Indians yelling and the French shouting from the heights, while the British waved their hats, daring them to come down and fight.

The grenadiers and the Royal Americans, who had borne the brunt of the fray, bore also nearly all the loss; which, in proportion to their numbers, was enormous. Knox reports it at four hundred and forty-three, killed, wounded, and missing, including one colonel, eight captains, twenty-one lieutenants, and three ensigns.

Vaudreuil, delighted, wrote to Bourlamaque an account of the affair. "I have no more anxiety about Quebec. M. Wolfe, I can assure you, will make no progress. Luckily for him, his prudence saved him from the consequences of his mad enterprise, and he contented himself with losing about five hundred of his best soldiers. Deserters say that he will try us again in a few days. That is what we want; he'll find somebody to talk to (il trouvera à qui parler)."

NOTE.—Among the killed in this affair was Edward Botwood, sergeant in the grenadiers of the forty-seventh, or Lascelles' regiment. "Ned Botwood" was well known among his comrades as a poet, and the following lines of his, written on the eve of the expedition to Quebec, continued to be favorites with the British troops during the War of the Revolution (see Historical Magazine, II. First Series, 164). It may be observed here that the war produced a considerable quantity of indifferent verse on both sides. On that of the English it took the shape of occasional ballads, such as "Bold General Wolfe," printed on broadsides, or of patriotic effusions scattered through magazines and newspapers, while the French celebrated all their victories with songs.

HOT STUFF.

ARR. — Likes of France.

Come, each death-doing dog who dares venture his neck,
Come, follow the hero that goes to Quebec,
Jump aboard of the transports, and loose every sail,
Pay your debts at the tavern by giving leg-bail;
And ye that love fighting shall soon have enough
Wolfe commands us, my boys, we shall give them Hot Stuff.

Up the River St. Lawrence our troops shall advance,
To the Grenadiers' March we will teach them to dance.
Cape Breton we have taken, and next we will try
At their capital to give them another black eye.
Vaudreuil, 't is in vain you pretend to look guff, —
Those are coming who know how to give you Hot Stuff.

With powder in his periwig, and snuff in his nose,
Monsieur will run down our descent to oppose;
And the Indians will come but the light infantry
Will soon oblige them to betake to a tree.
From such rascals as these may we fear a rebuff?
Advance, grenadiers, and let fly your Hot Stuff!

When the forty-seventh regiment is dashing ashore,
While bullets are whistling and cannons do roar,
Says Montcalm "Those are Shirley's, — I know the lapels."
"You lie," says Ned Botwood, "we belong to Lascelles!"
Tho' our cloathing is changed, yet we scorn a powder-puff;
So at you, ye b——s, here 's give you Hot Stuff."

On the repulse at Montmorenci, Wolfe to Pitt, 2 Septembre, 1759 Vaudreuil au Ministre, 6 Octobre, 1759 Panet, Journal du Siége.
Johnstone, Dialogue in Hades Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc Journal of the Siege of Quebec, by a Gentleman in an eminent Station on the Spot Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760 Fraser, Journal of the Siege.
Journal du Siége d'après un MS. déposé à la Bibliothèque Hartwell.
Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal of Transactions at the Siege of Quebec, in Notes and Queries, xx. 161. John Johnson, Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec. Journal of an Expedition on the River St. Lawrence. An Authentic Account of the Expedition against Quebec, by a Volunteer on that Expedition. J. Gibson to Governor Lawrence, 1
August, 1759. Knox, i. 854. Mante, 244.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1759.

AMHERST. NIAGARA

AMHERST ON LAKE GEORGE — CAPTURE OF TICONDEROGA AND CROWN POINT — DELAYS OF AMHERST — NIAGARA EXPEDITION — LA CORNE ATTACKS OSWEGO; HIS REPULSE — NIAGARA BESIEGED — AUBRY COMES TO ITS RELIEF — BATTLE — ROUT OF THE FRENCH — THE FORT TAKEN — ISLE-AUX-NOIX — AMHERST ADVANCES TO ATTACK IT — STORM — THE ENTERPRISE ABANDONED — ROGERS ATTACKS ST FRANCIS; DESTROYS THE TOWN. — SUFFERINGS OF THE RANGERS.

PITT had directed that, while Quebec was attacked, an attempt should be made to penetrate into Canada by way of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Thus the two armies might unite in the heart of the colony, or, at least, a powerful diversion might be effected in behalf of Wolfe. At the same time Oswego was to be re-established, and the possession of Fort Duquesne, or Pittsburg, secured by reinforcements and supplies; while Amherst, the commander-in-chief, was further directed to pursue any other enterprise which in his opinion would weaken the enemy, without detriment to the main objects of the campaign.¹ He accordingly resolved to attempt the capture of Niagara.

¹ Pitt to Amherst, 23 January, 10 March, 1759.

Brigadier Prideaux was charged with this stroke, Brigadier Stanwix was sent to conduct the operations for the relief of Pittsburg; and Amherst himself prepared to lead the grand central advance against Ticonderoga, Crown Point, and Montreal.¹

Towards the end of June he reached that valley by the head of Lake George which for five years past had been the annual mustering-place of armies. Here were now gathered about eleven thousand men, half regulars and half provincials,² drilling every day, firing by platoons, firing at marks, practising manœuvres in the woods; going out on scouting parties, bathing parties, fishing parties; gathering wild herbs to serve for greens, cutting brushwood and meadow hay to make hospital beds. The sick were ordered on certain mornings to repair to the surgeon's tent, there, in prompt succession, to swallow such doses as he thought appropriate to their several ailments; and it was further ordered that "every fair day they that can walk be paraded together and marched down to the lake to wash their hands and faces." Courts-martial were numerous; culprits were flogged at the head of each regiment in turn, and occasionally one was shot. A frequent employment was the cutting of spruce tops to make spruce beer. This innocent beverage was reputed sovereign against scurvy; and such was the fame of its virtues that a copious supply of the West Indian molasses used in concocting it was thought indispensable to every army or garrison in the wilderness. Throughout this campaign it is repeatedly mentioned in general orders, and the soldiers are promised that they shall have as much of it as they want at a halfpenny a quart.¹

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 19 June, 1759. Amherst to Stanwix, 6 May, 1759.

² Mante, 210.

The rear of the army was well protected from insult. Fortified posts were built at intervals of three or four miles along the road to Fort Edward, and especially at the station called Halfway Brook; while, for the whole distance, a broad belt of wood on both sides was cut down and burned, to deprive a skulking enemy of cover. Amherst was never long in one place without building a fort there. He now began one, which proved wholly needless, on that flat rocky hill where the English made their intrenched camp during the siege of Fort William Henry. Only one bastion of it was ever finished, and this is still shown to tourists under the name of Fort George.

The army embarked on Saturday, the twenty-first of July. The Reverend Benjamin Pomeroy watched their departure in some concern, and wrote on Monday to Abigail, his wife: "I could wish for more appearance of dependence on God than was observable among them; yet I hope God will grant deliverance unto Israel by them." There was another military pageant, another long procession of boats and banners, among the mountains and islands of Lake George. Night found them near the outlet; and here they lay till morning, tossed unpleasantly on waves ruffled by a summer gale. At daylight they landed, beat back a French detachment, and marched by the portage road to the saw-mill at the waterfall. There was little resistance. They occupied the heights, and then advanced to the famous line of intrenchment against which the army of Abercrombie had hurled itself in vain. These works had been completely reconstructed, partly of earth, and partly of logs. Amherst's followers were less numerous than those of his predecessor, while the French commander, Bourlamaque, had a force nearly equal to that of Montcalm in the summer before; yet he made no attempt to defend the intrenchment, and the English, encamping along its front, found it an excellent shelter from the cannon of the fort beyond.

¹ Orderly Book of Commissary Wilson in the Expedition against Ticonderoga, 1759. Journal of Samuel Warner, a Massachusetts Soldier, 1759. General and Regimental Orders, Army of Major-General Amherst, 1759. Diary of Sergeant Merriman of Ruggles's Regiment, 1759. I owe to William L Stone, Esq., the use of the last two curious documents.

Amherst brought up his artillery and began approaches in form, when, on the night of the twenty-third, it was found that Bourlamaque had retired down Lake Champlain, leaving four hundred men under Hebecourt to defend the place as long as possible. This was in obedience to an order from Vaudreuil, requiring him on the approach of the English to abandon both Ticonderoga and Crown Point, retreat to the outlet of Lake Champlain, take post at Isle-aux-Noix, and there defend himself to the last extremity;¹ a course unquestionably the best that could have been taken, since obstinacy in holding Ticonderoga might have involved the surrender of Bourlamaque's whole force, while Isle-aux-Noix offered rare advantages for defence.

The fort fired briskly; a cannon-shot killed Colonel Townshend, and a few soldiers were killed and wounded by grape and bursting shells; when, at dusk on the evening of the twenty-sixth, an unusual movement was seen among the garrison, and, about ten o'clock, three deserters came in great excitement to the English camp. They reported that Hebecourt and his soldiers were escaping in their boats, and that a match was burning in the magazine to blow Ticonderoga to atoms. Amherst offered a hundred guineas to any one of them who would point out the match, that it might be cut; but they shrank from the perilous venture. All was silent till eleven o'clock, when a broad, fierce glare burst on the night, and a roaring explosion shook the promontory; then came a few breathless moments, and then the fragments of Fort Ticonderoga fell with clatter and splash on the water and the land. It was but one bastion, however, that had been thus hurled skyward. The rest of the fort was little hurt, though the barracks and other combustible parts were set on fire, and by the light the French flag was seen still waving on the rampart.¹ A sergeant of the light infantry, braving the risk of other explosions, went and brought it off. Thus did this redoubted stronghold of France fall at last into English hands, as in all likelihood it would have done a year sooner, if Amherst had commanded in Abercrombie's place; for, with the deliberation that marked all his proceedings, he would have sat down before Montcalm's wooden wall and knocked it to splinters with his cannon.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Novembre, 1759 Instructions pour M. de Bourlamaque, 20 Mai, 1759, signé Vaudreuil. Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 4 Juin, 1759

He now set about repairing the damaged works and making ready to advance on Crown Point; when on the first of August his scouts told him that the enemy had abandoned this place also, and retreated northward down the lake.² Well pleased, he took possession of the deserted fort, and, in the animation of success, thought for a moment of keeping the promise he had given to Pitt "to make an irruption into Canada with the utmost vigor and despatch."³ Wolfe, his brother in arms and his friend, was battling with the impossible under the rocks of Quebec, and every motive, public and private, impelled Amherst to push to his relief, not counting costs, or balancing risks too nicely. He was ready enough to spur on others, for he wrote to

¹ Journal of Colonel Amherst (brother of General Amherst). Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Novembre, 1759 Amherst to Prideaux, 28 July, 1759. Amherst to Pitt, 27 July, 1759 Mante, 213. Knox, 1. 397-403, Vaudreuil à Boullamaque, 19 Juin, 1759.

² Amherst to Pitt, 5 August, 1759.

³ Ibid, 19 June, 1759.

Gage: "We must all be alert and active day and night; if we all do our parts the French must fall;"¹ but, far from doing his, he set the army to building a new fort at Crown Point, telling them that it would "give plenty, peace, and quiet to His Majesty's subjects for ages to come."² Then he began three small additional forts, as outworks to the first, sent two parties to explore the sources of the Hudson; one party to explore Otter Creek; another to explore South Bay, which was already well known; another to make a road across what is now the State of Vermont, from Crown Point to Charlestown, or "Number Four," on the Connecticut; and another to widen and improve the old French road between Crown Point and Ticonderoga. His industry was untiring; a great deal of useful work was done. but the essential task of making a diversion to aid the army of Wolfe was needlessly postponed.

It is true that some delay was inevitable. The French had four armed vessels on the lake, and this made it necessary to provide an equal or superior force to protect the troops on their way to Isle-aux-Noix. Captain Loring, the English naval commander, was therefore ordered to build a brigantine; and, this being thought insufficient, he was directed to add a kind of floating battery, moved by sweeps. Three weeks later, in consequence of farther information concerning the force of the French vessels,

¹ Amherst to Gage, 1 August, 1759.

² General Orders, 13 August, 1759

Amherst ordered an armed sloop to be put on the stocks; and this involved a long delay. The saw-mill at Ticonderoga was to furnish planks for the intended navy; but, being overtasked in sawing timber for the new works at Crown Point, it was continually breaking down. Hence much time was lost, and autumn was well advanced before Loring could launch his vessels.¹

Meanwhile news had come from Prideaux and the Niagara expedition. That officer had been ordered to ascend the Mohawk with five thousand regulars and provincials, leave a strong garrison at Fort Stanwix, on the Great Carrying Place, establish posts at both ends of Lake Oneida, descend the Onondaga to Oswego, leave nearly half his force there under Colonel Haldimand, and proceed with the rest to attack Niagara.² These orders he accomplished. Haldimand remained to reoccupy the spot that Montcalm had made desolate three years before; and, while preparing to build a fort, he barricaded his camp with pork and flour barrels, lest the enemy should make a dash upon him from their station at the head of the St. Lawrence Rapids. Such an attack was probable; for if the French could seize Oswego, the return of Prideaux from Niagara would be cut off, and when his small stock of provisions had failed, he would be reduced to extremity. Saint-Luc de la Corne left the head of the Rapids early in July with a thousand French and Canadians and a body of Indians, who soon made their appearance among the stumps and bushes that surrounded the camp at Oswego. The priest Piquet was of the party; and five deserters declared that he solemnly blessed them, and told them to give the English no quarter.¹ Some valuable time was lost in bestowing the benediction; yet Haldimand's men were taken by surprise. Many of them were dispersed in the woods, cutting timber for the intended fort, and it might have gone hard with them had not some of La Corne's Canadians become alarmed and rushed back to their boats, oversetting Father Piquet on the way.² These being rallied, the whole party ensconced itself in a tract of felled trees so far from the English that their fire did little harm. They continued it about two hours, and resumed it the next morning; when, three cannon being brought to bear on them, they took to their boats and disappeared, having lost about thirty killed and wounded, including two officers and La Corne himself, who was shot in the thigh. The English loss was slight.

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 22 October, 1759. This letter, which is in the form of a journal, covers twenty-one folio pages.

² Instructions of Amherst to Prideaux, 17 May, 1759. Prideaux to Haldimand, 30 June, 1759.

Prideaux safely reached Niagara, and laid siege to it. It was a strong fort, lately rebuilt in regular form by an excellent officer, Captain Pouchot, of the battalion of Béarn, who commanded it. It stood where the present fort stands, in the angle formed by the junction of the river Niagara with Lake Ontario, and was held by about six hundred men, well supplied with provisions and munitions of war.¹ Higher up the river, a mile and a half above the cataract, there was another fort, called Little Niagara, built of wood, and commanded by the half-breed officer, Joncaire-Chabert, who with his brother, Joncaire-Clauzonne, and a numerous clan of Indian relatives, had so long thwarted the efforts of Johnson to engage the Five Nations in the English cause. But recent English successes had had their effect. Joncaire's influence was waning, and Johnson was now in Prideaux's camp with nine hundred Five Nation warriors pledged to fight the French. Joncaire, finding his fort untenable, burned it, and came with his garrison and his Indian friends to reinforce Niagara.²

¹ Journal of Colonel Amherst.

² Pouchot, II. 130 Compare Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760; N. Y. Col. Docs., VII. 395; and Letter from Oswego, in Boston Evening Post, No. 1, 248.

Pouchot had another resource, on which he confidently relied. In obedience to an order from Vaudreuil, the French population of the Illinois, Detroit, and other distant posts, joined with troops of Western Indians, had come down the Lakes to recover Pittsburg, undo the work of Forbes, and restore French ascendancy on the Ohio. Pittsburg had been in imminent danger; nor was it yet safe, though General Stanwix was sparing no effort to succor it.¹ These mixed bands of white men and red, bush-rangers and savages, were now gathered, partly at Le Bœuf and Venango, but chiefly at Presq'isle, under command of Aubry, Ligneris, Marin, and other partisan chiefs, the best in Canada. No sooner did Pouchot learn that the English were coming to attack him than he sent a messenger to summon them all to his aid.²

¹ Pouchot says 515, besides 60 men from Little Niagara; Vaudreuil gives a total of 589.

² Pouchot, II. 52, 59. Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour Daniel de Joncaire-Chabert.

The siege was begun in form, though the English engineers were so incompetent that the trenches, as first laid out, were scoured by the fire of the place, and had to be made anew.³ At last the batteries opened fire. A shell from a coehorn burst prematurely, just as it left the mouth of the piece, and a fragment striking Prideaux on the head, killed him instantly. Johnson took command in his place, and made up in energy what he lacked in skill. In two or three weeks the fort was in extremity. The rampart was breached, more than a hundred of the garrison were killed or disabled, and the rest were exhausted with want of sleep. Pouchot watched anxiously for the promised succors; and on the morning of the twenty-fourth of July a distant firing told him that they were at hand.

¹ Letters of Colonel Hugh Mercer, commanding at Pittsburg, January-June, 1759 Letters of Stanwix, May-July, 1759. Letter from Pittsburg, in Boston News Letter, No 3,023. Narrative of John Ormsby

² Pouchot, II 46

³ Rutherford to Haldimand, 14 July, 1759 Prideaux was extremely disgusted Prideaux to Haldimand, 13 July, 1759 Allan Maclean, of the Highlanders, calls the engineers "fools and block heads, G—d d—n them" Maclean to Haldimand, 21 July, 1759

Aubry and Ligneris, with their motley following, had left Presqu'isle a few days before, to the number, according to Vaudreuil, of eleven hundred French and two hundred Indians.¹ Among them was a body of colony troops; but the Frenchmen of the party were chiefly traders and bush-rangers from the West, connecting links between civilization and savagery; some of them indeed were more white Indians, imbued with the ideas and morals of the wigwam, wearing hunting-shirts of smoked deer-skin embroidered with quills of the Canada porcupine, painting their faces black and red, tying eagle feathers in their long hair, or plastering it on their temples with a compound of vermilion and glue. They were excellent woodsmen, skilful hunters, and perhaps the best bush-fighters in all Canada.

When Pouchot heard the firing, he went with a wounded artillery officer to the bastion next the river; and as the forest had been cut away for a great distance, they could see more than a mile and a half along the shore. There, by glimpses among trees and bushes, they descried bodies of men, now advancing, and now retreating; Indians in rapid movement, and the smoke of guns, the sound of which reached their ears in heavy volleys, or a sharp and angry rattle. Meanwhile the English cannon had ceased their fire, and the silent trenches seemed deserted, as if their occupants were gone to meet the advancing foe. There was a call in the fort for volunteers to sally and destroy the works; but no sooner did they show themselves along the covered way than the seemingly abandoned trenches were thronged with men and bayonets, and the attempt was given up. The distant firing lasted half an hour, then ceased, and Pouchot remained in suspense; till, at two in the afternoon, a friendly Onondaga, who had passed unnoticed through the English lines, came to him with the announcement that the French and their allies had been routed and cut to pieces. Pouchot would not believe him.

¹ "Il n'y avoit que 1,100 François et 200 sauvages." Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Octobre, 1759. Johnson says "1,200 men, with a number of Indians." Johnson to Amherst, 25 July, 1759. Portneuf, commanding at Presqu'isle, wrote to Pouchot that there were 1,000 French and 1,200 Indians. Pouchot, n. 94. A letter from Aubry to Pouchot put the whole at 2,500, half of them Indians. Historical Magazine, v. Second Series, 199.

Nevertheless his tale was true. Johnson, besides his Indians, had with him about twenty-three hundred men, whom he was forced to divide into three separate bodies, — one to guard the bateaux, one to guard the trenches, and one to fight Aubry and his band. This last body consisted of the provincial light infantry and the pickets, two companies of grenadiers, and a hundred and fifty men of the forty-sixth regiment, all under command of Colonel Massey.¹

¹ Johnson to Amherst, 26 July, 1759. Knox, ii. 135 Captain Delancey to ———, 26 July, 1759 This writer commanded the light infantry in the fight.

They took post behind an abattis at a place called La Belle Famille, and the Five Nation warriors placed themselves on their flanks. These savages had shown signs of disaffection; and when the enemy approached, they opened a parley with the French Indians, which, however, soon ended, and both sides raised the war-whoop. The fight was brisk for a while; but at last Aubry's men broke away in a panic. The French officers seem to have made desperate efforts to retrieve the day, for nearly all of them were killed or captured; while their followers, after heavy loss, fled to their canoes and boats above the cataract, hastened back to Lake Erie, burned Presq'isle, Le Bœuf, and Venango, and, joined by the garrisons of those forts, retreated to Detroit, leaving the whole region of the upper Ohio in undisputed possession of the English.

At four o'clock on the day of the battle, after a furious cannonade on both sides, a trumpet sounded from the trenches, and an officer approached the fort with a summons to surrender. He brought also a paper containing the names of the captive French officers, though some of them were spelled in a way that defied recognition. Pouchot, feigning incredulity, sent an officer of his own to the English camp, who soon saw unanswerable proof of the disaster; for here, under a shelter of leaves and boughs near the tent of Johnson, sat Ligneris, severely wounded, with Aubry, Villiers, Montigny, Marin, and their companions in misfortune, — in all, sixteen officers, four cadets, and a surgeon.¹

Pouchot had now no choice but surrender. By the terms of the capitulation, the garrison were to be sent prisoners to New York, though honors of war were granted them in acknowledgment of their courageous conduct. There was a special stipulation that they should be protected from the Indians, of whom they stood in the greatest terror, lest the massacre of Fort William Henry should be avenged upon them. Johnson restrained his dangerous allies, and, though the fort was pillaged, no blood was shed.

The capture of Niagara was an important stroke. Thenceforth Detroit, Michilimackinac, the Illinois, and all the other French interior posts, were severed from Canada, and left in helpless isolation; but Amherst was not yet satisfied. On hearing of Prideaux's death he sent Brigadier Gage to supersede Johnson and take command on Lake Ontario, directing him to descend the St. Lawrence, attack the French posts at the head of the rapids, and hold them if possible for the winter. The attempt was difficult; for the French force on the St. Lawrence was now greater than that which Gage could bring against it, after providing for the safety of Oswego and Niagara. Nor was he by nature prone to dashing and doubtful enterprise. He reported that the movement was impossible, much to the disappointment of Amherst, who seemed to expect from subordinates an activity greater than his own.¹

¹ Johnson gives the names in his private Diary, printed in Stone, Life of Johnson, ii 394. Compare Pouchot, ii 105, 106. Letter from Niagara, in Boston Evening Post, No 1,250. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Octobre, 1759.

He, meanwhile, was working at his fort at Crown Point, while the season crept away, and Bourlamaque lay ready to receive him at Isle-aux-Noix. "I wait his coming with impatience," writes the French commander, "though I doubt if he will venture to attack a post where we are intrenched to the teeth, and armed with a hundred pieces of cannon."² Bourlamaque now had with him thirty-five hundred men, in a position of great strength. Isle-aux-Noix, planted in mid-channel of the Richelieu soon after it issues from Lake Champlain, had been diligently fortified since the spring. On each side of it was an arm of the river, closed against an enemy with chevaux-de-frise. To attack it in front in the face of its formidable artillery would be a hazardous attempt, and the task of reducing it was likely to be a long one. The French force in these parts had lately received accessions. After the fall of Niagara the danger seemed so great, both in the direction of Lake Ontario and that of Lake Champlain, that Lévis had been sent up from Quebec with eight hundred men to command the whole department of Montreal.³ A body of troops and militia was encamped opposite that town, ready to march towards either quarter, as need might be, while the abundant crops of the neighboring parishes were harvested by armed bands, ready at a word to drop the sickle for the gun.

¹ Amherst to Gage, 28 July, 1 August, 14 August, 11 September, 1759. Diary of Sir William Johnson, in Stone, Life of Johnson, ii. 394-429

² Bourlamaque à (Bernetz?), 22 Septembre, 1759.

³ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 9 Août, 1759 Rigaud à Bourlamaque, 14 Août, 1759. Lévis à Bourlamaque, 25 Août, 1759.

Thus the promised advance of Amherst into Canada would be not without its difficulties, even when his navy, too tardily begun, should be ready to act its part. But if he showed no haste in succoring Wolfe, he at least made some attempts to communicate with him. Early in August he wrote him a letter, which Ensign Hutchins, of the rangers, carried to him in about a month by the long and circuitous route of the Kennebec, and which, after telling the news of the campaign, ended thus: "You may depend on my doing all I can for effectually reducing Canada. Now is the time!"¹ Amherst soon after tried another expedient, and sent Captains Kennedy and Hamilton with a flag of truce and a message of peace to the Abenakis of St. Francis, who, he thought, won over by these advances, might permit the two officers to pass unmolested to Quebec. But the Abenakis seized them and carried them prisoners to Montreal; on which Amherst sent Major Robert Rogers and a band of rangers to destroy their town.²

It was the eleventh of October before the miniature navy of Captain Loring — the floating battery, the brig, and the sloop that had been begun three weeks

¹ Amherst to Wolfe, 7 August, 1759.

² Amherst to Pitt, 22 October, 1759 Rogers, Journals, 144.

too late — was ready for service. They sailed at once to look for the enemy. The four French vessels made no resistance. One of them succeeded in reaching Isle-aux-Noix; one was run aground; and two were sunk by their crews, who escaped to the shore. Amherst, meanwhile, leaving the provincials to work at the fort, embarked with the regulars in bateaux, and proceeded on his northern way till, on the evening of the twelfth, a head-wind began to blow, and, rising to a storm, drove him for shelter into Ligonier Bay, on the west side of the lake.¹ On the thirteenth, it blew a gale. The lake raged like an angry sea, and the frail bateaux, fit only for smooth water, could not have lived a moment. Through all the next night the gale continued, with floods of driving rain. "I hope it will soon change," wrote Amherst on the fifteenth, "for I have no time to lose." He was right. He had waited till the season of autumnal storms, when nature was more dangerous than man. On the sixteenth there was frost, and the wind did not abate. On the next morning it shifted to the south, but soon turned back with violence to the north, and the ruffled lake put on a look of winter, "which determined me," says the general, "not to lose time by striving to get to the Isle-aux-Noix, where I should arrive too late to force the enemy from their post, but to return to Crown Point and complete the works there." This he did, and spent the remnant of the season in the congenial task of finishing the fort, of which the massive remains still bear witness to his industry.

¹ Orderly Book of Commissary Wilson.

When Lévis heard that the English army had fallen back, he wrote, well pleased, to Bourlamaque: "I don't know how General Amherst will excuse himself to his Court, but I am very glad he let us alone, because the Canadians are so backward that you could count on nobody but the regulars."¹

Concerning this year's operations on the Lakes, it may be observed that the result was not what the French feared, or what the British colonists had cause to hope. If, at the end of winter, Amherst had begun, as he might have done, the building of armed vessels at the head of the navigable waters of Lake Champlain, where Whitehall now stands, he would have had a navy ready to his hand before August, and would have been able to follow the retreating French without delay, and attack them at Isle-aux-Noix before they had finished their fortifications. And if, at the same time, he had directed Prideaux, instead of attacking Niagara, to co-operate with him by descending the St. Lawrence towards Montreal, the prospect was good that the two armies would have united at that place, and ended the campaign by the reduction of all Canada. In this case Niagara and all the western posts would have fallen without a blow.

Major Robert Rogers, sent in September to punish the Abenakis of St. Francis, had addressed himself to the task with his usual vigor. These Indians had been settled for about three quarters of a century on the river St. Francis, a few miles above its junction with the St. Lawrence. They were nominal Christians, and had been under the control of their missionaries for three generations; but though zealous and sometimes fanatical in their devotion to the forms of Romanism, they remained thorough savages in dress, habits, and character. They were the scourge of the New England borders, where they surprised and burned farmhouses and small hamlets, killed men, women, and children without distinction, carried others prisoners to their village, subjected them to the torture of "running the gantlet," and compelled them to witness dances of triumph around the scalps of parents, children, and friends.

¹ Lévis à Bourlamaque, 1 Novembre, 1759.

Amherst's instructions to Rogers contained the following: "Remember the barbarities that have been committed by the enemy's Indian scoundrels. Take your revenge, but don't forget that, though those dastardly villains have promiscuously murdered women and children of all ages, it is my order that no women or children be killed or hurt."

Rogers and his men set out in whaleboats, and, eluding the French armed vessels, then in full activity, came, on the tenth day, to Missisquoi Bay, at the north end of Lake Champlain. Here he hid his boats, leaving two friendly Indians to watch them from a distance, and inform him should the enemy discover them. He then began his march for St. Francis, when, on the evening of the second day, the two Indians overtook him with the startling news that a party of about four hundred French had found the boats, and that half of them were on his tracks in hot pursuit. It was certain that the alarm would soon be given, and other parties sent to cut him off. He took the bold resolution of outmarching his pursuers, pushing straight for St. Francis, striking it before succors could arrive, and then returning by Lake Memphremagog and the Connecticut. Accordingly he despatched Lieutenant McMullen by a circuitous route back to Crown Point, with a request to Amherst that provisions should be sent up the Connecticut to meet him on the way down. Then he set his course for the Indian town, and for nine days more toiled through the forest with desperate energy. Much of the way was through dense spruce swamps, with no dry resting-place at night. At length the party reached the river St. Francis, fifteen miles above the town, and, hooking their arms together for mutual support, forded it with extreme difficulty. Towards evening, Rogers climbed a tree, and descried the town three miles distant. Accidents, fatigue, and illness had reduced his followers to a hundred and forty-two officers and men. He left them to rest for a time, and, taking with him Lieutenant Turner and Ensign Avery, went to reconnoitre the place; left his two companions, entered it disguised in an Indian dress, and saw the unconscious savages yelling and singing in the full enjoyment of a grand dance. At two o'clock in the morning he rejoined his party, and at three led them to the attack, formed them in a semi-circle, and burst in upon the town half an hour before sunrise. Many of the warriors were absent, and the rest were asleep. Some were killed in their beds, and some shot down in trying to escape. "About seven o'clock in the morning," he says, "the affair was completely over, in which time we had killed at least two hundred Indians and taken twenty of their women and children prisoners, fifteen of whom I let go their own way, and five I brought with me, namely, two Indian boys and three Indian girls. I likewise retook five English captives."

English scalps in hundreds were dangling from poles over the doors of the houses.¹ The town was pillaged and burned, not excepting the church, where ornaments of some value were found. On the side of the rangers, Captain Ogden and six men were wounded, and a Mohegan Indian from Stockbridge was killed. Rogers was told by his prisoners that a party of three hundred French and Indians was encamped on the river below, and that another party of two hundred and fifteen was not far distant. They had been sent to cut off the retreat of the invaders, but were doubtful as to their designs till after the blow was struck. There was no time to lose. The rangers made all haste southward, up the St. Francis, subsisting on corn from the Indian town, till, near the eastern borders of Lake Memphremagog, the supply failed, and they separated into small parties, the better to sustain life by hunting. The enemy followed close, attacked Ensign Avery's party, and captured five of them; then fell upon a band of about twenty, under Lieutenants Dunbar and Turner, and killed or captured nearly all. The other bands eluded their pursuers, turned southeastward, reached the Connecticut, some here, some there, and, giddy with fatigue and hunger, toiled wearily down the wild and lonely stream to the appointed rendezvous at the mouth of the Amonoosuc.

¹ Rogers says "about six hundred." Other accounts say six or seven hundred. The late Abbé Maurault, missionary of the St. Francis Indians, and their historian, adopts the latter statement, though it is probably exaggerated.

This was the place to which Rogers had requested that provisions might be sent; and the hope of finding them there had been the breath of life to the famished wayfarers. To their horror, the place was a solitude. There were fires still burning, but those who made them were gone. Amherst had sent Lieutenant Stephen up the river from Charlestown with an abundant supply of food; but finding nobody at the Amonoosuc, he had waited there two days, and then returned, carrying the provisions back with him; for which outrageous conduct he was expelled from the service. "It is hardly possible," says Rogers, "to describe our grief and consternation." Some gave themselves up to despair. Few but their indomitable chief had strength to go farther. There was scarcely any game, and the barren wilderness yielded no sustenance but a few lily bulbs and the tubers of the climbing plant called in New England the ground-nut. Leaving his party to these miserable resources, and promising to send them relief within ten days, Rogers made a raft of dry pine logs, and drifted on it down the stream, with Captain Ogden, a ranger, and one of the captive Indian boys. They were stopped on the second day by rapids, and gained the shore with difficulty. At the foot of the rapids, while Ogden and the ranger went in search of squirrels, Rogers set himself to making another raft; and, having no strength to use the axe, he burned down the trees, which he then divided into logs by the same process. Five days after leaving his party he reached the first English settlement, Charlestown, or "Number Four," and immediately sent a canoe with provisions to the relief of the sufferers, following himself with other canoes two days later. Most of the men were saved, though some died miserably of famine and exhaustion. Of the few who had been captured, we are told by a French contemporary that they "became victims of the fury of the Indian women," from whose clutches the Canadians tried in vain to save them.¹

NOTE — On the day after he reached "Number Four," Rogers wrote a report of his expedition to Amherst. This letter is printed in his Journals, in which he gives also a supplementary account, containing further particulars. The New Hampshire Gazette, Boston Evening Post, and other newspapers of the time recount the story in detail. Hoyt (Indian Wars, 302) repeats it, with a few additions drawn from the recollections of survivors, long after. There is another account, very short and unsatisfactory, by Thompson Maxwell, who says that he was of the party, which is doubtful. Mante (223) gives horrible details of the sufferings of the rangers. An old chief of the St Francis Indians, said to be one of those who pursued Rogers after the town was burned, many years ago told Mr Jesse Pennoyer, a government land surveyor, that Rogers laid an ambush for the pursuers, and defeated them with great loss. Thus, the story says, took place near the present town of Sherbrooke, and minute details are given, with high praise of the skill and conduct of the famous partisan. If such an incident really took place, it is scarcely possible that Rogers would not have made some mention of it. On the other hand, it is equally incredible that the Indians would have invented the tale of their own defeat. I am indebted for Pennoyer's puzzling narrative to the kindness of R. A. Ramsay, Esq., of Montreal. It was printed, in 1869, in the History of the Eastern Townships, by Mrs. C. M. Day. All things considered, it is probably groundless.

¹ Événements de la Guerre en Canada, 1759, 1760. Compare N. Y. Col. Docs., x 1042.

Vaudreuil describes the destruction of the village in a letter to the minister dated October 26, and says that Rogers had a hundred and fifty men, that St Francis was burned to ashes; that the head chief and others were killed, that he (Vaudreuil), hearing of the march of the rangers, sent the most active of the Canadians to oppose them, and that Longueuil sent all the Canadians and Indians he could muster to pursue them on their retreat, that forty-six rangers were killed, and ten captured; that he thinks all the rest will starve to death; and, finally, that the affair is very unfortunate.

I once, when a college student, followed on foot the route of Rogers from Lake Memphremagog to the Connecticut.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1759.

THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

ELATION OF THE FRENCH. — DESPONDENCY OF WOLFE. — THE PARISHES LAID WASTE. — OPERATIONS ABOVE QUEBEC. — ILLNESS OF WOLFE. — A NEW PLAN OF ATTACK — FAINT HOPE OF SUCCESS. — WOLFE'S LAST DESPATCH. — CONFIDENCE OF VAUDREUIL. — LAST LETTERS OF MONTCALM. — FRENCH VIGILANCE — BRITISH SQUADRON AT CAP ROUGE. — LAST ORDERS OF WOLFE — EMBARKATION — DESCENT OF THE ST. LAWRENCE — THE HEIGHTS SCALED. — THE BRITISH LINE. — LAST NIGHT OF MONTCALM — THE ALARM. — MARCH OF FRENCH TROOPS — THE BATTLE. — THE ROUT. — THE PURSUIT. — FALL OF WOLFE AND OF MONTCALM.

WOLFE was deeply moved by the disaster at the heights of Montmorenci, and in a General Order on the next day he rebuked the grenadiers for their precipitation. "Such impetuous, irregular, and unsoldierlike proceedings destroy all order, make it impossible for the commanders to form any disposition for an attack, and put it out of the general's power to execute his plans. The grenadiers could not suppose that they could beat the French alone."

The French were elated by their success. "Everybody," says the commissary Berniers, "thought that the campaign was as good as ended, gloriously for French regular officers. The blow was so alarming that Montcalm hastened from Beauport to take command in person; but when he arrived the English were gone.

Vaudreuil now saw his mistake in sending the French frigates up the river out of harm's way, and withdrawing their crews to serve the batteries of Quebec. Had these ships been there, they might have overpowered those of the English in detail as they passed the town. An attempt was made to retrieve the blunder. The sailors were sent to man the frigates anew and attack the squadron of Holmes. It was too late. Holmes was already too strong for them, and they were recalled. Yet the difficulties of the English still seemed insurmountable. Dysentery and fever broke out in their camps, the number of their effective men was greatly reduced, and the advancing season told them that their work must be done quickly, or not done at all.

On the other side, the distress of the French grew greater every day. Their army was on short rations. The operations of the English above the town filled the camp of Beauport with dismay, for troops and Canadians alike dreaded the cutting off of their supplies. These were all drawn from the districts of Three Rivers and Montreal; and, at best, they were in great danger, since when brought down in boats at night they were apt to be intercepted, while the difficulty of bringing them by land was extreme, through the scarcity of cattle and horses. Discipline was relaxed, disorder and pillage were rife, and the Canadians deserted so fast, that towards the end of August two hundred of them, it is said, would sometimes go off in one night. Early in the month the disheartening news came of the loss of Ticonderoga and Crown Point, the retreat of Bouchambaque, the fall of Niagara, and the expected advance of Amherst on Montreal. It was then that Lévis was despatched to the scene of danger; and Quebec was deplorably weakened by his absence. About this time the Lower Town was again set on fire by the English batteries, and a hundred and sixty-seven houses were burned in a night. In the front of the Upper Town nearly every building was a ruin. At the General Hospital, which was remote enough to be safe from the bombardment, every barn, shed, and garret, and even the chapel itself, were crowded with sick and wounded, with women and children from the town, and the nuns of the Ursulines and the Hôtel-Dieu, driven thither for refuge. Bishop Pontbriand, though suffering from a mortal disease, came almost daily to visit and console them from his lodging in the house of the curé at Charlesbourg.

Towards the end of August the sky brightened again. It became known that Amherst was not moving on Montreal, and Bouchambaque wrote that his position at Isle-aux-Noix was impregnable. On the twenty-seventh a deserter from Wolfe's army brought the welcome assurance that the invaders despaired of success, and would soon sail for home; while there were movements in the English camps and fleet that seemed to confirm what he said. Vaudreuil breathed more freely, and renewed hope and confidence visited the army of Beauport.

Meanwhile a deep cloud fell on the English. Since the siege began, Wolfe had passed with ceaseless energy from camp to camp, animating the troops, observing everything, and directing everything; but now the pale face and tall lean form were seen no more, and the rumor spread that the general was dangerously ill. He had in fact been seized by an access of the disease that had tortured him for some time past; and fever had followed. His quarters were at a French farmhouse in the camp at Montmorenci; and here, as he lay in an upper chamber, helpless in bed, his singular and most unmilitary features haggard with disease and drawn with pain, no man could less have looked the hero. But as the needle, though quivering, points always to the pole, so, through torment and languor and the heats of fever, the mind of Wolfe dwelt on the capture of Quebec. His illness, which began before the twentieth of August, had so far subsided on the twenty-fifth that Knox wrote in his Diary of that day: "His Excellency General Wolfe is on the recovery, to the inconceivable joy of the whole army." On the twenty-ninth he was able to write or dictate a letter to the three brigadiers, Monckton, Townshend, and Murray: "That the public service may not suffer by the General's indisposition, he begs the brigadiers will meet and consult together for the public utility and advantage, and consider of the best method to attack the enemy." The letter then proposes three plans, all bold to audacity. The first was to send a part of the army to ford the Montmorenci eight or nine miles above its mouth, march through the forest, and fall on the rear of the French at Beauport, while the rest landed and attacked them in front. The second was to cross the ford at the mouth of the Montmorenci and march along the strand, under the French intrenchments, till a place could be found where the troops might climb the heights. The third was to make a general attack from boats at the Beauport flats. Wolfe had before entertained two other plans, one of which was to scale the heights at St. Michel, about a league above Quebec; but this he had abandoned on learning that the French were there in force to receive him. The other was to storm the Lower Town; but this also he had abandoned, because the Upper Town, which commanded it, would still remain inaccessible.

The brigadiers met in consultation, rejected the three plans proposed in the letter, and advised that an attempt should be made to gain a footing on the north shore above the town, place the army between Montcalm and his base of supply, and so force him to fight or surrender. The scheme was similar to that of the heights of St. Michel. It seemed desperate, but so did all the rest; and if by chance it should succeed, the gain was far greater than could follow any success below the town. Wolfe embraced it at once.

Not that he saw much hope in it. He knew that every chance was against him. Disappointment in the past and gloom in the future, the pain and exhaustion of disease, toils, and anxieties "too great," in the words of Burke, "to be supported by a delicate constitution, and a body unequal to the vigorous and enterprising soul that it lodged," threw him at times into deep dejection. By those intimate with him he was heard to say that he would not go back defeated, "to be exposed to the censure and reproach of an ignorant populace." In other moods he felt that he ought not to sacrifice what was left of his diminished army in vain conflict with hopeless obstacles. But his final resolve once taken, he would not swerve from it. His fear was that he might not be able to lead his troops in person. "I know perfectly well you cannot cure me," he said to his physician; "but pray make me up so that I may be without pain for a few days, and able to do my duty: that is all I want."

In a despatch which Wolfe had written to Pitt, Admiral Saunders conceived that he had ascribed to the fleet more than its just share in the disaster at Montmorenci; and he sent him a letter on the subject. Major Barré kept it from the invalid till the fever had abated. Wolfe then wrote a long answer, which reveals his mixed dejection and resolve. He affirms the justice of what Saunders had said, but adds: "I shall leave out that part of my letter to Mr. Pitt which you object to. I am sensible of my own errors in the course of the campaign, see clearly wherein I have been deficient, and think a little more or less blame to a man that must necessarily be ruined, of little or no consequence. I take the blame of that unlucky day entirely upon my own shoulders, and I expect to suffer for it" Then, speaking of the new project of an attack above Quebec, he says despondingly: "My ill state of health prevents me from executing my own plan; it is of too desperate a nature to order others to execute." He proceeds, however, to give directions for it. "It will be necessary to run as many small craft as possible above the town, with provisions for six weeks, for about five thousand, which is all I intend to take. My letters, I hope, will be ready to-morrow, and I hope I shall have strength to lead these men to wherever we can find the enemy."

On the next day, the last of August, he was able for the first time to leave the house. It was on this same day that he wrote his last letter to his mother: "My writing to you will convince you that no personal evils worse than defeats and disappointments have fallen upon me. The enemy puts nothing to risk, and I can't in conscience put the whole army to risk. My antagonist has wisely shut himself up in inaccessible intrenchments, so that I can't get at him without spilling a torrent of blood, and that perhaps to little purpose. The Marquis de Montcalm is at the head of a great number of bad soldiers, and I am at the head of a small number of good ones, that wish for nothing so much as to fight him; but the wary old fellow avoids an action, doubtful of the behavior of his army. People must be of the profession to understand the disadvantages and difficulties we labor under, arising from the uncommon natural strength of the country."

On the second of September a vessel was sent to England with his last despatch to Pitt. It begins thus: "The obstacles we have met with in the operations of the campaign are much greater than we had reason to expect or could foresee; not so much from the number of the enemy (though superior to us) as from the natural strength of the country, which the Marquis of Montcalm seems wisely to depend upon. When I learned that succors of all kinds had been thrown into Quebec; that five battalions of regular troops, completed from the best inhabitants of the country, some of the troops of the colony, and every Canadian that was able to bear arms, besides several nations of savages, had taken the field in a very advantageous situation, — I could not flatter myself that I should be able to reduce the place. I sought, however, an occasion to attack their army, knowing well that with these troops I was able to fight, and hoping that a victory might disperse them." Then, after recounting the events of the campaign with admirable clearness, he continues: "I found myself so ill, and am still so weak, that I begged the general officers to consult together for the general utility. They are all of opinion that, as more ships and provisions are now got above the town, they should try, by conveying up a corps of four or five thousand men (which is nearly the whole strength of the army after the Points of Levi and Orleans are left in a proper state of defence), to draw the enemy from their present situation and bring them to an action. I have acquiesced in the proposal, and we are preparing to put it into execution." The letter ends thus: "By the list of disabled officers, many of whom are of rank, you may perceive that the army is much weakened. By the nature of the river, the most formidable part of this armament is deprived of the power of acting; yet we have almost the whole force of Canada to oppose. In this situation there is such a choice of difficulties that I own myself at a loss how to determine. The affairs of Great Britain, I know, require the most vigorous measures; but the courage of a handful of brave troops should be exerted only when there is some hope of a favorable event; however, you may be assured that the small part of the campaign which remains shall be employed, as far as I am able, for the honor of His Majesty and the interest of the nation, in which I am sure of being well seconded by the Admiral and by the generals; happy if our efforts here can contribute to the success of His Majesty's arms in any other parts of America."

Some days later, he wrote to the Earl of Holder-nesse: "The Marquis of Montcalm has a numerous body of armed men (I cannot call it an army), and the strongest country perhaps in the world. Our fleet blocks up the river above and below the town, but can give no manner of aid in an attack upon the Canadian army. We are now here [off Cap-Rouge] with about thirty-six hundred men, waiting to attack them when and wherever they can best be got at. I am so far recovered as to do business; but my constitution is entirely ruined, without the consolation of doing any considerable service to the state, and without any prospect of it." He had just learned, through the letter brought from Amherst by Ensign Hutchins, that he could expect no help from that quarter.

Perhaps he was as near despair as his undaunted nature was capable of being. In his present state of body and mind he was a hero without the light and cheer of heroism. He flattered himself with no illusions, but saw the worst and faced it all. He seems to have been entirely without excitement. The languor of disease, the desperation of the chances, and the greatness of the stake may have wrought to tranquillize him. His energy was doubly tasked: to bear up his own sinking frame, and to achieve an almost hopeless feat of arms.

Audacious as it was, his plan cannot be called rash if we may accept the statement of two well-informed writers on the French side. They say that on the tenth of September the English naval commanders held a council on board the flagship, in which it was resolved that the lateness of the season required the fleet to leave Quebec without delay. They say further that Wolfe then went to the admiral, told him that he had found a place where the heights could be scaled, that he would send up a hundred and fifty picked men to feel the way, and that if they gained a lodgement at the top, the other troops should follow; if, on the other hand, the French were there in force to oppose them, he would not sacrifice the army in a hopeless attempt, but embark them for home, consoled by the thought that all had been done that man could do. On this, concludes the story, the admiral and his officers consented to wait the result.¹

As Wolfe had informed Pitt, his army was greatly weakened. Since the end of June his loss in killed and wounded was more than eight hundred and fifty, including two colonels, two majors, nineteen captains, and thirty-four subalterns; and to these were to be added a greater number disabled by disease.

The squadron of Admiral Holmes above Quebec had now increased to twenty-two vessels, great and small. One of the last that went up was a diminutive schooner, armed with a few swivels, and jocosely named the "Terror of France." She sailed by the town in broad daylight, the French, incensed at her impudence, blazing at her from all their batteries; but she passed unharmed, anchored by the admiral's ship, and saluted him triumphantly with her swivels.

¹ This statement is made by the Chevalier Johnstone, and, with some variation, by the author of the valuable Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm. Bigot says that, after the battle, he was told by British officers that Wolfe meant to risk only an advance party of two hundred men, and to re-embark if they were repulsed.

Wolfe's first move towards executing his plan was the critical one of evacuating the camp at Montmorenci. This was accomplished on the third of September. Montcalm sent a strong force to fall on the rear of the retiring English. Monckton saw the movement from Point Levi, embarked two battalions in the boats of the fleet, and made a feint of landing at Beauport. Montcalm recalled his troops to repulse the threatened attack; and the English withdrew from Montmorenci unmolested, some to the Point of Orleans, others to Point Levi. On the night of the fourth a fleet of flatboats passed above the town with the baggage and stores. On the fifth, Murray, with four battalions, marched up the river Etechemin, and forded it under a hot fire from the French batteries at Sillery. Monckton and Townshend followed with three more battalions, and the united force, of about thirty-six hundred men, was embarked on board the ships of Holmes, where Wolfe joined them on the same evening.

These movements of the English filled the French commanders with mingled perplexity, anxiety, and hope. A deserter told them that Admiral Saunders was impatient to be gone. Vaudreuil grew confident. "The breaking up of the camp at Montmorenci," he says, "and the abandonment of the intrenchments there, the re-embarkation on board the vessels above Quebec of the troops who had encamped on the south bank, the movements of these vessels, the removal of the heaviest pieces of artillery from the batteries of Point Levi, — these and the lateness of the season all combined to announce the speedy departure of the fleet, several vessels of which had even sailed down the river already. The prisoners and the deserters who daily came in told us that this was the common report in their army."¹ He wrote to Bourlamaque on the first of September: "Everything proves that the grand design of the English has failed."

Yet he was ceaselessly watchful. So was Montcalm; and he, too, on the night of the second, snatched a moment to write to Bourlamaque from his headquarters in the stone house, by the river of Beauport: "The night is dark; it rains; our troops are in their tents, with clothes on, ready for an alarm; I in my boots; my horses saddled. In fact, this is my usual way. I wish you were here; for I cannot be everywhere, though I multiply myself, and have not taken off my clothes since the twenty-third of June." On the eleventh of September he wrote his last letter to Bourlamaque, and probably the last that his pen ever traced. "I am overwhelmed with work, and should often lose temper, like you, if I did not remember that I am paid by Europe for not losing it. Nothing new since my last. I give the enemy another month, or something less, to stay here." The more sanguine Vaudreuil would hardly give them a week.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759

Meanwhile, no precaution was spared. The force under Bougainville above Quebec was raised to three thousand men.¹ He was ordered to watch the shore as far as Jacques-Cartier, and follow with his main body every movement of Holmes's squadron. There was little fear for the heights near the town; they were thought inaccessible.² Even Montcalm believed them safe, and had expressed himself to that effect some time before. "We need not suppose," he wrote to Vaudreuil, "that the enemy have wings;" and again, speaking of the very place where Wolfe afterwards landed, "I swear to you that a hundred men posted there would stop their whole army."³ He was right. A hundred watchful and determined men could have held the position long enough for reinforcements to come up.

The hundred men were there. Captain de Vergor, of the colony troops, commanded them, and reinforcements were within his call; for the battalion of Guienne had been ordered to encamp close at hand on the Plains of Abraham.⁴ Vergor's post, called Anse du Foulon, was a mile and a half from Quebec. A little beyond it, by the brink of the cliffs, was another post, called Samos, held by seventy men

¹ Journal du Siège (Bibliothèque de Hartwell). Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759

² Pontbriand, Jugement impartial.

³ Montcalm à Vaudreuil, 27 Juillet. Ibid, 29 Juillet, 1759.

⁴ Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc.

with four cannon; and, beyond this again, the heights of Sillery were guarded by a hundred and thirty men, also with cannon.¹ These were outposts of Bougainville, whose headquarters were at Cap-Rouge, six miles above Sillery, and whose troops were in continual movement along the intervening shore. Thus all was vigilance; for while the French were strong in the hope of speedy delivery, they felt that there was no safety till the tents of the invader had vanished from their shores and his ships from their river. "What we knew," says one of them, "of the character of M. Wolfe, that impetuous, bold, and intrepid warrior, prepared us for a last attack before he left us."

Wolfe had been very ill on the evening of the fourth. The troops knew it, and their spirits sank; but, after a night of torment, he grew better, and was soon among them again, rekindling their ardor, and imparting a cheer that he could not share. For himself he had no pity; but when he heard of the illness of two officers in one of the ships, he sent them a message of warm sympathy, advised them to return to Point Levi, and offered them his own barge and an escort. They thanked him, but replied that, come what might, they would see the enterprise to an end. Another officer remarked in his hearing that one of the invalids had a very delicate constitution. "Don't tell me of constitution," said Wolfe; "he has good spirit, and good spirit will carry a man through everything."¹ An immense moral force bore up his own frail body and forced it to its work.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759

Major Robert Stobo, who, five years before, had been given as a hostage to the French at the capture of Fort Necessity, arrived about this time in a vessel from Halifax. He had long been a prisoner at Quebec, not always in close custody, and had used his opportunities to acquaint himself with the neighborhood. In the spring of this year he and an officer of rangers named Stevens had made their escape with extraordinary skill and daring; and he now returned to give his countrymen the benefit of his local knowledge.² His biographer says that it was he who directed Wolfe in the choice of a landing-place.³ Be this as it may, Wolfe in person examined the river and the shores as far as Pointe-aux-Trembles; tall at length, landing on the south side a little above Quebec, and looking across the water with a telescope, he descried a path that ran with a long slope up the face of the woody precipice, and saw at the top a cluster of tents. They were those of Vergor's guard at the Anse du Foulon, now called Wolfe's Cove. As he could see but ten or twelve of them, he thought that the guard could not be numerous, and might be overpowered. His hope would have been stronger if he had known that Vergor had once been tried for misconduct and cowardice in the surrender of Beauséjour, and saved from merited disgrace by the friendship of Bigot and the protection of Vaudreuil.¹

¹ Knox, ii. 61, 65

² Letters in Boston Post Boy, No 97, and Boston Evening Post, No 1,258.

³ Memoirs of Major Robert Stobo Curious, but often inexact.

The morning of the seventh was fair and warm, and the vessels of Holmes, their crowded decks gay with scarlet uniforms, sailed up the river to Cap-Rouge. A lively scene awaited them; for here were the headquarters of Bougainville, and here lay his principal force, while the rest watched the banks above and below. The cove into which the little river runs was guarded by floating batteries; the surrounding shore was defended by breastworks; and a large body of regulars, militia, and mounted Canadians in blue uniforms moved to and fro, with restless activity, on the hills behind. When the vessels came to anchor, the horsemen dismounted and formed in line with the infantry; then, with loud shouts, the whole rushed down the heights to man their works at the shore. That true Briton, Captain Knox, looked on with a critical eye from the gangway of his ship, and wrote that night in his Diary that they had made a ridiculous noise. "How different!" he exclaims, "how nobly awful and expressive of true valor is the customary silence of the British troops!"

In the afternoon the ships opened fire, while the troops entered the boats and rowed up and down as if looking for a landing-place. It was but a feint of Wolfe to deceive Bougainville as to his real design.

¹ See supra, i. 263.

A heavy easterly rain set in on the next morning, and lasted two days without respite. All operations were suspended, and the men suffered greatly in the crowded transports. Half of them were therefore landed on the south shore, where they made their quarters in the village of St. Nicolas, refreshed themselves, and dried their wet clothing, knapsacks, and blankets.

For several successive days the squadron of Holmes was allowed to drift up the river with the flood tide and down with the ebb, -thus passing and repassing incessantly between the neighborhood of Quebec on one hand, and a point high above Cap-Rouge on the other; while Bougainville, perplexed, and always expecting an attack, followed the ships to and fro along the shore, by day and by night, till his men were exhausted with ceaseless forced marches.¹

At last the time for action came. On Wednesday, the twelfth, the troops at St. Nicolas were embarked again, and all were told to hold themselves in readiness. Wolfe, from the flagship "Sutherland," issued his last general orders. "The enemy's force is now divided, great scarcity of provisions in their camp, and universal discontent among the Canadians. Our troops below are in readiness to join us; all the light artillery and tools are embarked at the Point of Levi; and the troops will land where the French seem least to expect it. The first body that gets on shore is to march directly to the enemy and drive them from any little post they may occupy; the officers must be careful that the succeeding bodies do not by any mistake fire on those who go before them. The battalions must form on the upper ground with expedition, and be ready to charge whatever presents itself. When the artillery and troops are landed, a corps will be left to secure the landing-place, while the rest march on and endeavor to bring the Canadians and French to a battle. The officers and men will remember what their country expects from them, and what a determined body of soldiers inured to war is capable of doing against five weak French battalions mingled with a disorderly peasantry."

¹ Joannès, Major de Québec, Mémoire sur la Campagne de 1759

The spirit of the army answered to that of its chief. The troops loved and admired their general, trusted their officers, and were ready for any attempt. "Nay, how could it be otherwise," quaintly asks honest Sergeant John Johnson, of the fifty-eighth regiment, "being at the heels of gentlemen whose whole thirst, equal with their general, was for glory? We had seen them tried, and always found them sterling. We knew that they would stand by us to the last extremity."

Wolfe had thirty-six hundred men and officers with him on board the vessels of Holmes; and he now sent orders to Colonel Burton at Point Levi to bring to his aid all who could be spared from that place and the Point of Orleans. They were to march along the south bank, after nightfall, and wait further orders at a designated spot convenient for embarkation. Their number was about twelve hundred, so that the entire force destined for the enterprise was at the utmost forty-eight hundred.¹ With these, Wolfe meant to climb the heights of Abraham in the teeth of an enemy who, though much reduced, were still twice as numerous as their assailants.²

Admiral Saunders lay with the main fleet in the Basin of Quebec. This excellent officer, whatever may have been his views as to the necessity of a speedy departure, aided Wolfe to the last with unfailing energy and zeal. It was agreed between them that while the general made the real attack, the admiral should engage Montcalm's attention by a pretended one. As night approached, the fleet ranged itself along the Beauport shore; the boats were lowered and filled with sailors, marines, and the few troops that had been left behind; while ship signalled to ship, cannon flashed and thundered, and shot ploughed the beach, as if to clear a way for assailants to land. In the gloom of the evening the effect was imposing. Montcalm, who thought that the movements of the English above the town were only a feint, that their main force was still below it, and that their real attack would be made there, was completely deceived, and massed his troops in front of Beauport to repel the expected landing. But while in the fleet of Saunders all was uproar and ostentatious menace, the danger was ten miles away, where the squadron of Holmes lay tranquil and silent at its anchorage off Cap-Rouge.

¹ See Note, end of chapter

² Including Bougainville's command. An escaped prisoner told Wolfe, a few days before, that Montcalm still had fourteen thousand men. Journal of an Expedition on the River St Lawrence. This meant only those in the town and the camps of Beauport. "I don't believe their whole army amounts to that number," wrote Wolfe to Colonel Burton, on the tenth. He knew, however, that if Montcalm could bring all his troops together, the French would outnumber him more than two to one.

It was less tranquil than it seemed. All on board knew that a blow would be struck that night, though only a few high officers knew where. Colonel Howe, of the light infantry, called for volunteers to lead the unknown and desperate venture, promising, in the words of one of them, "that if any of us survived we might depend on being recommended to the general."¹ As many as were wanted — twenty-four in all — soon came forward. Thirty large bateaux and some boats belonging to the squadron lay moored alongside the vessels; and late in the evening the troops were ordered into them, the twenty-four volunteers taking their place in the foremost. They held in all about seventeen hundred men. The rest remained on board.

Bougainville could discern the movement, and misjudged it, thinking that he himself was to be attacked. The tide was still flowing; and, the better to deceive him, the vessels and boats were allowed to drift upward with it for a little distance, as if to land above Cap-Rouge.

¹ Journal of the Particular Transactions during the Siege of Quebec. The writer, a soldier in the light infantry, says he was one of the first eight who came forward. See Notes and Queries, xx. 370.

The day had been fortunate for Wolfe. Two deserters came from the camp of Bougainville with intelligence that, at ebb tide on the next night, he was to send down a convoy of provisions to Montcalm. The necessities of the camp at Beauport, and the difficulties of transportation by land, had before compelled the French to resort to this perilous means of conveying supplies; and their boats, drifting in darkness under the shadows of the northern shore, had commonly passed in safety. Wolfe saw at once that, if his own boats went down in advance of the convoy, he could turn the intelligence of the deserters to good account.

He was still on board the "Sutherland." Every preparation was made, and every order given; it only remained to wait the turning of the tide. Seated with him in the cabin was the commander of the sloop-of-war "Porcupine," his former school-fellow, John Jervis, afterwards Earl St. Vincent. Wolfe told him that he expected to die in the battle of the next day; and taking from his bosom a miniature of Miss Lowther, his betrothed, he gave it to him with a request that he would return it to her if the presentiment should prove true.¹

Towards two o'clock the tide began to ebb, and a fresh wind blew down the river. Two lanterns were raised into the maintop shrouds of the "Sutherland."

¹ Tucker, Life of Earl St Vincent, 1. 19. (London, 1844)

It was the appointed signal; the boats cast off and fell down with the current, those of the light infantry leading the way. The vessels with the rest of the troops had orders to follow a little later.

To look for a moment at the chances on which this bold adventure hung. First, the deserters told Wolfe that provision-boats were ordered to go down to Quebec that night; secondly, Bougainville countermanded them; thirdly, the sentries posted along the heights were told of the order, but not of the countermand;¹ fourthly, Vergor at the Anse du Foulon had permitted most of his men, chiefly Canadians from Lorette, to go home for a time and work at their harvesting, on condition, it is said, that they should afterwards work in a neighboring field of his own;² fifthly, he kept careless watch, and went quietly to bed; sixthly, the battalion of Guienne, ordered to take post on the Plains of Abraham, had, for reasons unexplained, remained encamped by the St. Charles;³ and lastly, when Bougainville saw Holmes's vessels drift down the stream, he did not tax his weary troops to follow them, thinking that they would return as usual with the flood tide.⁴ But for these conspiring circumstances New France might have lived a little longer, and the fruitless heroism of Wolfe would have passed, with countless other heroisms, into oblivion.

¹ Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc

² Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

³ Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc.

⁴ Johnstone, Dialogue. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759.

For full two hours the procession of boats, borne on the current, steered silently down the St. Lawrence. The stars were visible, but the night was moonless and sufficiently dark. The general was in one of the foremost boats, and near him was a young midshipman, John Robison, afterwards professor of natural philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. He used to tell in his later life how Wolfe, with a low voice, repeated Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" to the officers about him. Probably it was to relieve the intense strain of his thoughts. Among the rest was the verse which his own fate was soon to illustrate, —

"The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

"Gentlemen," he said, as his recital ended, "I would rather have written those lines than take Quebec." None were there to tell him that the hero is greater than the poet.

As they neared their destination, the tide bore them in towards the shore, and the mighty wall of rock and forest towered in darkness on their left. The dead stillness was suddenly broken by the sharp Qui vive! of a French sentry, invisible in the thick gloom. France! answered a Highland officer of Fraser's regiment from one of the boats of the light infantry. He had served in Holland, and spoke French fluently.

À quel régiment?

De la Reine, replied the Highlander. He knew that a part of that corps was with Bougainville. The sentry, expecting the convoy of provisions, was satisfied, and did not ask for the password.

Soon after, the foremost boats were passing the heights of Samos, when another sentry challenged them, and they could see him through the darkness running down to the edge of the water, within range of a pistol-shot. In answer to his questions, the same officer replied, in French: "Provision-boats. Don't make a noise; the English will hear us."¹ In fact, the sloop-of-war "Hunter" was anchored in the stream not far off. This time, again, the sentry let them pass. In a few moments they rounded the headland above the Anse du Foulon. There was no sentry there. The strong current swept the boats of the light infantry a little below the intended landing-place.² They disembarked on a narrow strand at the foot of heights as steep as a hill covered with trees can be. The twenty-four volunteers led the way, climbing with what silence they might, closely followed by a much larger body. When they reached the top they saw in the dim light a cluster of tents at a short distance, and immediately made a dash at them. Vergor leaped from bed and tried to run off, but was shot in the heel and captured. His men, taken by surprise, made little resistance. One or two were caught, and the rest fled.

¹ See a note of Smollett, History of England, v. 56 (ed 1805). Sergeant Johnson, Vaudreuil, Foligny, and the Journal of Particular Transactions give similar accounts.

² Saunders to Pitt, 20 September. Journal of Sergeant Johnson. Compare Knox, ii. 67.

The main body of troops waited in their boats by the edge of the strand. The heights near by were cleft by a great ravine choked with forest trees; and in its depths ran a little brook called Ruisseau St.-Denis, which, swollen by the late rains, fell plashing in the stillness over a rock. Other than this no sound could reach the strained ear of Wolfe but the gurgle of the tide and the cautious climbing of his advance-parties as they mounted the steeps at some little distance from where he sat listening. At length from the top came a sound of musket-shots, followed by loud huzzas, and he knew that his men were masters of the position. The word was given, the troops leaped from the boats and scaled the heights, some here, some there, clutching at trees and bushes, their muskets slung at their backs. Tradition still points out the place, near the mouth of the ravine, where the foremost reached the top. Wolfe said to an officer near him: "You can try it, but I don't think you 'll get up." He himself, however, found strength to drag himself up with the rest. The narrow slanting path on the face of the heights had been made impassable by trenches and abattis; but all obstructions were soon cleared away, and then the ascent was easy. In the gray of the morning the long file of red-coated soldiers moved quickly upward, and formed in order on the plateau above.

Before many of them had reached the top, cannon were heard close on the left. It was the battery at Samos firing on the boats in the rear and the vessels descending from Cap-Rouge. A party was sent to silence it; this was soon effected, and the more distant battery at Sillery was next attacked and taken. As fast as the boats were emptied they returned for the troops left on board the vessels and for those waiting on the southern shore under Colonel Burton.

The day broke in clouds and threatening rain. Wolfe's battalions were drawn up along the crest of the heights. No enemy was in sight, though a body of Canadians had sallied from the town and moved along the strand towards the landing-place, whence they were quickly driven back. He had achieved the most critical part of his enterprise; yet the success that he coveted placed him in imminent danger. On one side was the garrison of Quebec and the army of Beauport, and Bougainville was on the other. Wolfe's alternative was victory or ruin; for if he should be overwhelmed by a combined attack, retreat would be hopeless. His feelings no man can know; but it would be safe to say that hesitation or doubt had no part in them.

He went to reconnoitre the ground, and soon came to the Plains of Abraham, so called from Abraham Martin, a pilot known as Maitre Abraham, who had owned a piece of land here in the early times of the colony. The Plains were a tract of grass, tolerably level in most parts, patched here and there with corn-fields, studded with clumps of bushes, and forming a part of the high plateau at the eastern end of which Quebec stood. On the south it was bounded by the declivities along the St. Lawrence; on the north, by those along the St. Charles, or rather along the meadows through which that lazy stream crawled like a writhing snake. At the place that Wolfe chose for his battle-field the plateau was less than a mile wide

Thither the troops advanced, marched by files till they reached the ground, and then wheeled to form their line of battle, which stretched across the plateau and faced the city. It consisted of six battalions and the detached grenadiers from Louisbourg, all drawn up in ranks three deep. Its right wing was near the brink of the heights along the St. Lawrence; but the left could not reach those along the St. Charles. On this side a wide space was perforce left open, and there was danger of being out-flanked. To prevent this, Brigadier Townshend was stationed here with two battalions, drawn up at right angles with the rest, and fronting the St. Charles. The battalion of Webb's regiment, under Colonel Burton, formed the reserve; the third battalion of Royal Americans was left to guard the landing; and Howe's light infantry occupied a wood far in the rear. Wolfe, with Monckton and Murray, commanded the front line, on which the heavy fighting was to fall, and which, when all the troops had arrived, numbered less than thirty-five hundred men.¹

Quebec was not a mile distant, but they could not see it; for a ridge of broken ground intervened, called Buttes-à-Neveu, about six hundred paces off. The first division of troops had scarcely come up when, about six o'clock, this ridge was suddenly thronged with white uniforms. It was the battalion of Guenne, arrived at the eleventh hour from its camp by the St. Charles. Some time after there was hot firing in the rear. It came from a detachment of Bougainville's command attacking a house where some of the light infantry were posted. The assailants were repulsed, and the firing ceased. Light showers fell at intervals, besprinkling the troops as they stood patiently waiting the event.

¹ See Note, end of chapter.

Montcalm had passed a troubled night. Through all the evening the cannon bellowed from the ships of Saunders, and the boats of the fleet hovered in the dusk off the Beauport shore, threatening every moment to land. Troops lined the intrenchments till day, while the general walked the field that adjoined his headquarters till one in the morning, accompanied by the Chevalier Johnstone and Colonel Poulariez. Johnstone says that he was in great agitation, and took no rest all night. At daybreak he heard the sound of cannon above the town. It was the battery at Samos firing on the English ships. He had sent an officer to the quarters of Vaudreuil, which were much nearer Quebec, with orders to bring him word at once should anything unusual happen. But no word came, and about six o'clock he mounted and rode thither with Johnstone. As they advanced, the country behind the town opened more and more upon their sight; till at length, when opposite Vaudreuil's house, they saw across the St. Charles, some two miles away, the red ranks of British soldiers on the heights beyond.

"This is a serious business," Montcalm said; and sent off Johnstone at full gallop to bring up the troops from the centre and left of the camp. Those of the right were in motion already, doubtless by the governor's order. Vaudreuil came out of the house. Montcalm stopped for a few words with him; then set spurs to his horse, and rode over the bridge of the St. Charles to the scene of danger.¹ He rode with a fixed look, uttering not a word.²

The army followed in such order as it might, crossed the bridge in hot haste, passed under the northern rampart of Quebec, entered at the Palace Gate, and pressed on in headlong march along the quaint narrow streets of the warlike town: troops of Indians in scalp-locks and war-paint, a savage glitter in their deep-set eyes; bands of Canadians whose all was at stake, — faith, country, and home; the colony regulars; the battalions of Old France, a torrent of white uniforms and gleaming bayonets, La Sarre, Languedoc, Roussillon, Béarn, — victors of Oswego, William Henry, and Ticonderoga. So they swept on, poured out upon the plain, some by the gate of St. Louis, and some by that of St. John, and hurried, breathless, to where the banners of Guenne still fluttered on the ridge.

¹ Johnstone, Dialogue

² Malartic à Bourlamaque, — Septembre, 1759

Montcalm was amazed at what he saw. He had expected a detachment, and he found an army. Full in sight before him stretched the lines of Wolfe: the close ranks of the English infantry, a silent wall of red, and the wild array of the Highlanders, with their waving tartans, and bagpipes screaming defiance. Vaudreuil had not come; but not the less was felt the evil of a divided authority and the jealousy of the rival chiefs. Montcalm waited long for the forces he had ordered to join him from the left wing of the army. He waited in vain. It is said that the governor had detained them, lest the English should attack the Beauport shore. Even if they did so, and succeeded, the French might defy them, could they but put Wolfe to rout on the Plains of Abraham. Neither did the garrison of Quebec come to the aid of Montcalm. He sent to Ramesay, its commander, for twenty-five field-pieces which were on the Palace battery. Ramesay would give him only three, saying that he wanted them for his own defence. There were orders and counter-orders; misunderstanding, haste, delay, perplexity.

Montcalm and his chief officers held a council of war. It is said that he and they alike were for immediate attack. His enemies declare that he was afraid lest Vaudreuil should arrive and take command; but the governor was not a man to assume responsibility at such a crisis. Others say that his impetuosity overcame his better judgment; and of this charge it is hard to acquit him. Bougainville was but a few miles distant, and some of his troops were much nearer; a messenger sent by way of Old Lorette could have reached him in an hour and a half at most, and a combined attack in front and rear might have been concerted with him. If, moreover, Montcalm could have come to an understanding with Vaudreuil, his own force might have been strengthened by two or three thousand additional men from the town and the camp of Beauport; but he felt that there was no time to lose, for he imagined that Wolfe would soon be reinforced, which was impossible, and he believed that the English were fortifying themselves, which was no less an error. He has been blamed not only for fighting too soon, but for fighting at all. In this he could not choose. Fight he must, for Wolfe was now in a position to cut off all his supplies. His men were full of ardor, and he resolved to attack before their ardor cooled. He spoke a few words to them in his keen, vehement way. "I remember very well how he looked," one of the Canadians, then a boy of eighteen, used to say in his old age; "he rode a black or dark bay horse along the front of our lines, brandishing his sword, as if to excite us to do our duty. He wore a coat with wide sleeves, which fell back as he raised his arm, and showed the white linen of the wristband."¹ which, if not quite real, was at least well feigned. The three field-pieces sent by Ramesay plied them with canister-shot, and fifteen hundred Canadians and Indians fusilladed them in front and flank. Over all the plain, from behind bushes and knolls and the edge of cornfields, puffs of smoke sprang incessantly from the guns of these hidden marksmen. Skirmishers were thrown out before the lines to hold them in check, and the soldiers were ordered to lie on the grass to avoid the shot. The firing was liveliest on the English left, where bands of sharpshooters got under the edge of the declivity, among thickets, and behind scattered houses, whence they killed and wounded a considerable number of Townshend's men. The light infantry were called up from the rear. The houses were taken and retaken, and one or more of them was burned.

The English waited the result with a composure

¹ Recollections of Joseph Trahan, in Revue Canadienne, iv. 856.

Wolfe was everywhere. How cool he was, and why his followers loved him, is shown by an incident that happened in the course of the morning. One of his captains was shot through the lungs; and on recovering consciousness he saw the general standing at his side. Wolfe pressed his hand, told him not to despair, praised his services, promised him early promotion, and sent an aide-de-camp to Monckton to beg that officer to keep the promise if he himself should fall.¹

It was towards ten o'clock when, from the high

¹ Sir Denis Le Marchant, cited by Wright, 579. Le Marchant knew the captain in his old age. Monckton kept Wolfe's promise.

ground on the right of the line, Wolfe saw that the crisis was near. The French on the ridge had formed themselves into three bodies, regulars in the centre, regulars and Canadians on right and left. Two field-pieces, which had been dragged up the heights at Anse du Foulon, fired on them with grape-shot, and the troops, rising from the ground, prepared to receive them. In a few moments more they were in motion. They came on rapidly, uttering loud shouts, and firing as soon as they were within range. Their ranks, ill ordered at the best, were further confused by a number of Canadians who had been mixed among the regulars, and who, after hastily firing, threw themselves on the ground to reload.¹ The British advanced a few rods; then halted and stood still. When the French were within forty paces the word of command rang out, and a crash of musketry answered all along the line. The volley was delivered with remarkable precision. In the battalions of the centre, which had suffered least from the enemy's bullets, the simultaneous explosion was afterwards said by French officers to have sounded like a cannon-shot. Another volley followed, and then a furious clattering fire that lasted but a minute or two. When the smoke rose, a miserable sight was revealed: the ground cumbered with dead and wounded, the advancing masses stopped short and turned into a frantic mob, shouting, cursing, gesticulating. The order was given to charge. Then over the field rose the British cheer, mixed with the fierce yell of the Highland slogan. Some of the corps pushed forward with the bayonet; some advanced firing. The clansmen drew their broadswords and dashed on, keen and swift as bloodhounds. At the English right, though the attacking column was broken to pieces, a fire was still kept up, chiefly, it seems, by sharpshooters from the bushes and cornfields, where they had lain for an hour or more. Here Wolfe himself led the charge, at the head of the Louisbourg grenadiers. A shot shattered his wrist. He wrapped his handkerchief about it and kept on. Another shot struck him, and he still advanced, when a third lodged in his breast. He staggered, and sat on the ground. Lieutenant Brown, of the grenadiers, one Henderson, a volunteer in the same company, and a private soldier, aided by an officer of artillery who ran to join them, carried him in their arms to the rear. He begged them to lay him down. They did so, and asked if he would have a surgeon. "There's no need," he answered; "it's all over with me." A moment after, one of them cried out: "They run; see how they run!" "Who run?" Wolfe demanded, like a man roused from sleep. "The enemy, sir. Egad, they give way everywhere!" "Go, one of you, to Colonel Burton," returned the dying man; "tell him to march Webb's regiment down to Charles River, to cut off their retreat from the bridge." Then, turning on his side, he murmured, "Now, God be praised, I will die in peace!" and in a few moments his gallant soul had fled.

¹ "Les Canadiens, qui étaient mêlés dans les bataillons, se pressèrent de tirer et, dès qu'ils l'eussent fait, de mettre ventre à terre pour charger, ce qui rompit tout l'ordre" Malartic à Bourlamaque 25 Septembre, 1759

Montcalm, still on horseback, was borne with the tide of fugitives towards the town. As he approached the walls a shot passed through his body. He kept his seat; two soldiers supported him, one on each side, and led his horse through the St. Louis Gate. On the open space within, among the excited crowd, were several women, drawn, no doubt, by eagerness to know the result of the fight. One of them recognized him, saw the streaming blood, and shrieked, "O mon Dieu ! mon Dieu ! le Marquis est tué !" "It's nothing, it's nothing," replied the death-stricken man; "don't be troubled for me, my good friends." ("Ce n'est rien, ce n'est rien ; ne vous affligez pas pour moi, mes bonnes amies.")

NOTE — There are several contemporary versions of the dying words of Wolfe. The report of Knox, given above, is by far the best attested. Knox says that he took particular pains at the time to learn them accurately from those who were with Wolfe when they were uttered.

The anecdote of Montcalm is due to the late Hon Malcolm Fraser, of Quebec. He often heard it in his youth from an old woman, who, when a girl, was one of the group who saw the wounded general led by, and to whom the words were addressed.

Force of the English and French at the Battle of Quebec — The tabular return given by Knox shows the number of officers and men in each corps engaged. According to this, the battalions as they stood on the Plains of Abraham before the battle varied in strength from 322 (Monckton's) to 683 (Webb's), making a total of 4,828, including officers But another return, less specific, signed George Townshend, Brigadier, makes the entire number only 4,441 Townshend succeeded Wolfe in the command; and this return, which is preserved in the Public Record Office, was sent to London a few days after the battle Some French writers present put the number lower, perhaps for the reason that Webb's regiment and the third battalion of Royal Americans took no part in the fight, the one being in the rear as a reserve, and the other also invisible, guarding the landing-place Wolfe's front line, which alone met and turned the French attack, was made up as follows, the figures including officers and men —

Thirty-fifth Regiment . .	519	Twenty-eighth Regiment .	421
Fifty-eighth " . .	385	Forty-seventh " .	300
Seventy-eighth " . .	662	Forty-third " .	327
Louisbourg Grenadiers .	241	Light Infantry	400
Making a total of 3,265

The French force engaged cannot be precisely given Knox, on information received from "an intelligent Frenchman," states the number, corps by corps, the aggregate being 7,520 This, on examination, plainly appears exaggerated. Fraser puts it at 5,000; Townshend at 4,470, including militia. Bigot says, 3,500, which may perhaps be as many as actually advanced to the attack, since some of the militia held back Including Bougainville's command, the militia and artillerymen left in the Beauport camp, the sailors at the town batteries, and the garrison of Quebec, at least as many of the French were out of the battle as were in it; and the numbers engaged on each side seem to have been about equal.

For authorities of the foregoing chapter, see Appendix i.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1759.

FALL OF QUEBEC.

AFTER THE BATTLE — CANADIANS RESIST THE PURSUIT — ARRIVAL OF VAUDREUIL — SOLNE IN THE REDOUBT — PANIC — MOVEMENTS OF THE VICTORS — VAUDREUIL'S COUNCIL OF WAR — PRECIPITATE RETREAT OF THE FRENCH ARMY — LAST HOURS OF MONTCALM, HIS DEATH AND BURIAL — QUEBEC ABANDONED TO ITS FATE — DESPAIR OF THE GARRISON — LEVIS JOINS THE ARMY — ATTEMPTS TO RELIEVE THE TOWN — SURRENDER — THE BRITISH OCCUPY QUEBEC — SLANDERS OF VAUDREUIL — RECEPTION IN ENGLAND OF THE NEWS OF WOLFE'S VICTORY AND DEATH — PREDICTION OF JONATHAN MAYHEW

"NEVER was rout more complete than that of our army," says a French official.¹ It was the more so because Montcalm held no troops in reserve, but launched his whole force at once against the English. Nevertheless there was some resistance to the pursuit. It came chiefly from the Canadians, many of whom had not advanced with the regulars to the attack. Those on the right wing, instead of doing so, threw themselves into an extensive tract of bushes that lay in front of the English left; and from this cover they opened a fire, too distant for much effect, till the victors advanced in their turn, when the shot of the hidden marksmen told severely upon them. Two battalions, therefore, deployed before the bushes, fired volleys into them, and drove their occupants out.

¹ Dame au Ministre, 9 Octobre, 1759.

Again, those of the Canadians who, before the main battle began, attacked the English left from the brink of the plateau towards the St. Charles, withdrew when the rout took place, and ran along the edge of the declivity till, at the part of it called Côte Ste.-Geneviève, they came to a place where it was overgrown with thickets. Into these they threw themselves; and were no sooner under cover than they faced about to fire upon the Highlanders, who presently came up. As many of these mountaineers, according to their old custom, threw down their muskets when they charged, and had no weapons but their broadswords, they tried in vain to dislodge the marksmen, and suffered greatly in the attempt. Other troops came to their aid, cleared the thickets, after stout resistance, and drove their occupants across the meadow to the bridge of boats. The conduct of the Canadians at the Côte Ste.-Geneviève went far to atone for the shortcomings of some of them on the battle-field.

A part of the fugitives escaped into the town by the gates of St. Louis and St. John, while the greater number fled along the front of the ramparts, rushed down the declivity to the suburb of St. Roch, and ran over the meadows to the bridge, protected by the cannon of the town and the two armed hulks in the river. The rout had but just begun when Vaudreuil crossed the bridge from the camp of Beauport. It was four hours since he first heard the alarm, and his quarters were not much more than two miles from the battle-field. He does not explain why he did not come sooner; it is certain that his coming was well timed to throw the blame on Montcalm in case of defeat, or to claim some of the honor for himself in case of victory. "Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm," he says, "unfortunately made his attack before I had joined him."¹ His joining him could have done no good; for though he had at last brought with him the rest of the militia from the Beauport camp, they had come no farther than the bridge over the St. Charles, having, as he alleges, been kept there by an unauthorized order from the chief of staff, Montreuil.² He declares that the regulars were in such a fright that he could not stop them; but that the Canadians listened to his voice, and that it was he who rallied them at the Côte Ste.-Geneviève. Of this the evidence is his own word. From other accounts it would appear that the Canadians rallied themselves. Vaudreuil lost no time in recrossing the bridge and joining the militia in the redoubt at the farther end, where a crowd of fugitives soon poured in after him.

The aide-de-camp Johnstone, mounted on horseback, had stopped for a moment in what is now the suburb of St. John to encourage some soldiers who were trying to save a cannon that had stuck fast in a marshy hollow; when, on spurring his horse to the higher ground, he saw within musket-shot a long line of British troops, who immediately fired upon him. The bullets whistled about his ears, tore his clothes, and wounded his horse; which, however, carried him along the edge of the declivity to a wind-mill, near which was a roadway to a bakehouse on the meadow below. He descended, crossed the meadow, reached the bridge, and rode over it to the great redoubt or hornwork that guarded its head.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 21 Septembre, 1759.

² Ibid., 5 Octobre, 1759

The place was full of troops and Canadians in a wild panic. "It is impossible," says Johnstone, "to imagine the disorder and confusion I found in the hornwork. Consternation was general. M. de Vaudreuil listened to everybody, and was always of the opinion of him who spoke last. On the appearance of the English troops on the plain by the bakehouse, Montguet and La Motte, two old captains in the regiment of Béarn, cried out with vehemence to M. de Vaudreuil 'that the hornwork would be taken in an instant by assault, sword in hand; that we all should be cut to pieces without quarter; and that nothing would save us but an immediate and general capitulation of Canada, giving it up to the English.'"¹

¹ Confirmed by Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc. "Divers officiers des troupes de terre n'hésitèrent point à dire, tout haut en présence du soldat, qu'il ne nous restoit d'autre ressource, que celle de capituler promptement pour toute la colonie," etc.

Yet the river was wide and deep, and the hornwork was protected on the water side by strong palisades, with cannon. Nevertheless there rose a general cry to cut the bridge of boats. By doing so more than half the army, who had not yet crossed, would have been sacrificed. The axemen were already at work, when they were stopped by some officers, who had not lost their wits.

"M. de Vaudreuil," pursues Johnstone, "was closeted in a house in the inside of the hornwork with the Intendant and some other persons. I suspected they were busy drafting the articles for a general capitulation, and I entered the house, where I had only time to see the Intendant, with a pen in his hand, writing upon a sheet of paper, when M. de Vaudreuil told me I had no business there. Having answered him that what he had said was true, I retired immediately, in wrath to see them intent on giving up so scandalously a dependency for the preservation of which so much blood and treasure had been expended." On going out he met Lieutenant-Colonels Dalquier and Poulariez, whom he begged to prevent the apprehended disgrace, and, in fact, if Vaudreuil really meant to capitulate for the colony, he was presently dissuaded by firmer spirits than his own.

Johnstone, whose horse could carry him no farther, set out on foot for Beauport, and, in his own words, "continued sorrowfully jogging on, with a very heavy heart for the loss of my dear friend M. de Montcalm, sinking with weariness, and lost in reflection upon the changes which Providence had brought about in the space of three or four hours."

Great indeed were these changes. Montcalm was dying; his second in command, the Brigadier Senezergues, was mortally wounded; the army, routed and demoralized, was virtually without a head; and the colony, yesterday cheered as on the eve of deliverance, was plunged into sudden despair. "Ah, what a cruel day!" cries Bougainville; "how fatal to all that was dearest to us! My heart is torn in its most tender parts. We shall be fortunate if the approach of winter saves the country from total ruin."¹

The victors were fortifying themselves on the field of battle. Like the French, they had lost two generals; for Monckton, second in rank, was disabled by a musket-shot, and the command had fallen upon Townshend at the moment when the enemy were in full flight. He had recalled the pursuers, and formed them again in line of battle, knowing that another foe was at hand. Bougainville, in fact, appeared at noon from Cap-Rouge with about two thousand men; but withdrew on seeing double that force prepared to receive him. He had not heard till eight o'clock that the English were on the Plains of Abraham; and the delay of his arrival was no doubt due to his endeavors to collect as many as possible of his detachments posted along the St. Lawrence for many miles towards Jacques-Cartier.

Before midnight the English had made good progress in their redoubts and intrenchments, had brought cannon up the heights to defend them, planted a battery on the Côte Ste.-Geneviève, descended into the meadows of the St. Charles, and taken possession of the General Hospital, with its crowds of sick and wounded. Their victory had cost them six hundred and sixty-four of all ranks, killed, wounded, and missing. The French loss is placed by Vaudreuil at about six hundred and forty, and by the English official reports at about fifteen hundred. Measured by the numbers engaged, the battle of Quebec was but a heavy skirmish; measured by results, it was one of the great battles of the world.

¹ Bougainville à Bourlamaque, 18 Septembre, 1759.

Vaudreuil went from the hornwork to his quarters on the Beauport road and called a council of war. It was a tumultuous scene. A letter was despatched to Quebec to ask advice of Montcalm. The dying general sent a brief message to the effect that there was a threefold choice, — to fight again, retreat to Jacques-Cartier, or give up the colony. There was much in favor of fighting. When Bougainville had gathered all his force from the river above, he would have three thousand men; and these, joined to the garrison of Quebec, the sailors at the batteries, and the militia and artillerymen of the Beauport camp, would form a body of fresh soldiers more than equal to the English then on the Plains of Abraham. Add to these the defeated troops, and the victors would be greatly outnumbered.¹ Bigot gave his voice for fighting. Vaudreuil expressed himself to the same effect; but he says that all the officers were against him. "In vain I remarked to these gentlemen that we were superior to the enemy, and should beat them if we managed well. I could not at all change their opinion, and my love for the service and for the colony made me subscribe to the views of the council. In fact, if I had attacked the English against the advice of all the principal officers, their ill-will would have exposed me to the risk of losing the battle and the colony also."¹

¹ Bigot, as well as Vaudreuil, sets Bougainville's force at three thousand "En réunissant le corps de M. de Bougainville, les

It was said at the time that the officers voted for retreat because they thought Vaudreuil unfit to command an army, and, still more, to fight a battle.² There was no need, however, to fight at once. The object of the English was to take Quebec, and that of Vaudreuil should have been to keep it. By a march of a few miles he could have joined Bougainville; and by then intrenching himself at or near Ste.-Foy he would have placed a greatly superior force in the English rear, where his position might have been made impregnable. Here he might be bataillons de Montréal [laissés au camp de Beauport] et la garnison de la ville, il nous restoit encore près de 5000 hommes de troupes fraîches" Journal tenu à l'Armée. Vaudreuil says that there were fifteen hundred men in garrison at Quebec who did not take part in the battle. If this is correct, the number of fresh troops after it was not five thousand, but more than six thousand; to whom the defeated force is to be added, making, after deducting killed and wounded, some ten thousand in all easily furnished with provisions, and from hence he could readily throw men and supplies into Quebec, which the English were too few to invest. He could harass the besiegers, or attack them, should opportunity offer, and either raise the siege or so protract it that they would be forced by approaching winter to sail homeward, robbed of the fruit of their victory.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759.

² Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

At least he might have taken a night for reflection. He was safe behind the St. Charles. The English, spent by fighting, toil, and want of sleep, were in no condition to disturb him. A part of his own men were in deadly need of rest; the night would have brought refreshment, and the morning might have brought wise counsel. Vaudreuil would not wait, and orders were given at once for retreat.¹ It began at nine o'clock that evening. Quebec was abandoned to its fate. The cannon were left in the lines of Beauport, the tents in the encampments, and provisions enough in the storehouses to supply the army for a week. "The loss of the Marquis de Montcalm," says a French officer then on the spot, "robbed his successors of their senses, and they thought of nothing but flight; such was their fear that the enemy would attack the intrenchments the next day. The army abandoned the camp in such disorder that the like was never known."² "It was not a retreat," says Johnstone, who was himself a part of it, "but an abominable flight, with such disorder and confusion that, had the English known it, three hundred men sent after us would have been sufficient to cut all our army to pieces. The soldiers were all mixed, scattered, dispersed, and running as hard as they could, as if the English army were at their heels." They passed Charlesbourg, Lorette, and St. Augustin, till, on the fifteenth, they found rest on the impregnable hill of Jacques-Cartier, by the brink of the St. Lawrence, thirty miles from danger.

¹ Laure d'Ordres, Ordre du 13 Septembre, 1759.

² Fohigny, Journal mémoratif

In the night of humiliation when Vaudreuil abandoned Quebec, Montcalm was breathing his last within its walls. When he was brought wounded from the field, he was placed in the house of the Surgeon Arnoux, who was then with Bourlamaque at Isle-aux-Noix, but whose younger brother, also a surgeon, examined the wound and pronounced it mortal. "I am glad of it," Montcalm said quietly; and then asked how long he had to live. "Twelve hours, more or less," was the reply. "So much the better," he returned. "I am happy that I shall not live to see the surrender of Quebec." He is reported to have said that since he had lost the battle it consoled him to have been defeated by so brave an enemy; and some of his last words were in praise of his successor, Lévis, for whose talents and fitness for command he expressed high esteem. When Vaudreuil sent to ask his opinion, he gave it; but when Ramesay, commandant of the garrison, came to receive his orders, he replied. "I will neither give orders nor interfere any further. I have much business that must be attended to, of greater moment than your ruined garrison and this wretched country. My time is very short; therefore pray leave me. I wish you all comfort, and to be happily extricated from your present perplexities." Nevertheless he thought to the last of those who had been under his command, and sent the following note to Brigadier Townshend: "Monsieur, the humanity of the English sets my mind at peace concerning the fate of the French prisoners and the Canadians. Feel towards them as they have caused me to feel. Do not let them perceive that they have changed masters. Be their protector as I have been their father."¹

Bishop Pontbriand, himself fast sinking with mortal disease, attended his death-bed and administered the last sacraments. He died peacefully at four o'clock on the morning of the fourteenth. He was in his forty-eighth year.

In the confusion of the time no workman could be found to make a coffin, and an old servant of the Ursulines, known as Bonhomme Michel, gathered a few boards and nailed them together so as to form a rough box. In it was laid the body of the dead soldier; and late in the evening of the same day he was carried to his rest. There was no tolling of bells or firing of cannon. The officers of the garrison followed the bier, and some of the populace, including women and children, joined the procession as it moved in dreary silence along the dusky street, shattered with cannon-ball and bomb, to the chapel of the Ursuline convent. Here a shell, bursting under the floor, had made a cavity which had been hollowed into a grave. Three priests of the Cathedral, several nuns, Ramesay with his officers, and a throng of townspeople were present at the rite. After the service and the chant, the body was lowered into the grave by the light of torches; and then, says the chronicle, "the tears and sobs burst forth. It seemed as if the last hope of the colony were buried with the remains of the General."¹ In truth, the funeral of Montcalm was the funeral of New France.²

¹ I am indebted to Abbé Bois for a copy of this note. The last words of Montcalm, as above, are reported partly by Johnstone, and partly by Knox.

It was no time for grief. The demands of the hour were too exigent and stern. When, on the morning after the battle, the people of Quebec saw the tents standing in the camp of Beauport, they thought the army still there to defend them.³ Ramesay knew that the hope was vain. On the evening before, Vaudreuil had sent two hasty notes to tell him of his flight. "The position of the enemy," wrote the governor, "becomes stronger every instant, and this, with other reasons, obliges me to retreat." "I have received all your letters. As I set out this moment, I pray you not to write again. You shall hear from me to-morrow. I wish you good evening." With these notes came the following order: "M. de Ramesay is not to wait till the enemy carries the town by assault. As soon as provisions fail, he will raise the white flag." This order was accompanied by a memorandum of terms which Ramesay was to ask of the victors ¹

¹ Ursulines de Québec, iii. 10

² See Appendix, J

³ Mémoire du Sieur de Ramesay.

"What a blow for me," says the unfortunate commandant, "to find myself abandoned so soon by the army, which alone could defend the town!" His garrison consisted of between one and two hundred troops of the line, some four or five hundred colony troops, a considerable number of sailors, and the local militia.² These last were in a state of despair. The inhabitants who, during the siege, had sought refuge in the suburb of St. Roch, had returned after the battle, and there were now twenty-six hundred women and children, with about a thousand invalids and other non-combatants to be supported, though the provisions in the town, even at half rations, would hardly last a week. Ramesay had not been informed that a good supply was left in the camps of Beauport; and when he heard at last that it was there, and sent out parties to get it, they found that the Indians and the famished country people had carried it off.

¹ Mémoire pour servir d'Instruction à M. de Ramesay, 18 Septembre, 1759 Appended, with the foregoing notes, to the Mémoire de Ramesay

² The English returns give a total of 615 French regulars in the place besides sailors and militia

"Despondency," he says again, "was complete; discouragement extreme and universal. Murmurs and complaints against the army that had abandoned us rose to a general outcry. I could not prevent the merchants, all of whom were officers of the town militia, from meeting at the house of M. Daine, the mayor. There they declared for capitulating, and presented me a petition to that effect, signed by M. Daine and all the principal citizens."

Ramesay called a council of war. One officer alone, Friedmont, captain of artillery, was for reducing the rations still more, and holding out to the last. All the others gave their voices for capitulation.¹ Ramesay might have yielded without dishonor; but he still held out till an event fraught with new hope took place at Jacques-Cartier.

This event was the arrival of Lévis. On the afternoon of the battle Vaudreuil took one rational step; he sent a courier to Montreal to summon that able officer to his aid.² Lévis set out at once, reached Jacques-Cartier, and found his worst fears realized. "The great number of fugitives that I began to meet at Three Rivers prepared me for the disorder in which I found the army. I never in my life knew the like of it. They left everything behind in the camp at Beauport; tents, baggage, and kettles."

¹ Copie du Conseil de Guerre tenu par M. de Ramesay à Québec, 15 Septembre, 1759.

² Lévis à Bourlamaque, 15 Septembre, 1759. Lévis, Guerre du Canada

He spoke his mind freely; loudly blamed the retreat, and urged Vaudreuil to march back with all speed to whence he came.¹ The governor, stiff at ordinary times, but pliant at a crisis, welcomed the firmer mind that decided for him, consented that the troops should return, and wrote afterwards in his despatch to the minister: "I was much charmed to find M. de Lévis disposed to march with the army towards Quebec."²

Lévis, on his part, wrote: "The condition in which I found the army, bereft of everything, did not discourage me, because M. de Vaudreuil told me that Quebec was not taken, and that he had left there a sufficiently numerous garrison; I therefore resolved, in order to repair the fault that had been committed, to engage M. de Vaudreuil to march the army back to the relief of the place. I represented to him that this was the only way to prevent the complete defection of the Canadians and Indians; that our knowledge of the country would enable us to approach very near the enemy, whom we knew to be intrenching themselves on the heights of Quebec and constructing batteries to breach the walls; that if we found their army ill posted, we could attack them, or, at any rate, could prolong the siege by throwing men and supplies into the town; and that if we could not save it, we could evacuate and burn it, so that the enemy could not possibly winter there.”¹ Lévis quickly made his presence felt in the military chaos about him. Bigot bestirred himself with his usual vigor to collect provisions; and before the next morning all was ready.² Bougainville had taken no part in the retreat, but sturdily held his ground at Cap-Rouge while the fugitive mob swept by him. A hundred of the mounted Canadians who formed part of his command were now sent to Quebec, each with a bag of biscuit across his saddle. They were to circle round to the Beauport side, where there was no enemy, and whence they could cross the St. Charles in canoes to the town. Bougainville followed close with a larger supply. Vaudreuil sent Ramesay a message, revoking his order to surrender if threatened with assault, telling him to hold out to the last, and assuring him that the whole army was coming to his relief. Lévis hastened to be gone: but first he found time to write a few lines to Bourlamaque. “We have had a very great loss, for we have lost M. de Montcalm. I regret him as my general and my friend. I found our army here. It is now on the march to retrieve our fortunes. I can trust you to hold your position; as I have not M. de Montcalm’s talents, I look to you to second me and advise me. Put a good face on it. Hide this business as long as you can. I am mounting my horse this moment. Write me all the news."¹

¹ Bigot au Ministre, 15 Octobre, 1759. Malartic à Bourlamaque, 28 Septembre, 1759.

² "Je fus bien charmé," etc. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Octobre, 1759.

¹ Lévis au Ministre, 10 Novembre, 1759.

² Livre d’Ordres, Ordre du 17-18 Septembre, 1759.

The army marched that morning, the eighteenth. In the evening it reached St. Augustin; and here it was stopped by the chilling news that Quebec had surrendered.

Utter confusion had reigned in the disheartened garrison. Men deserted hourly, some to the country, and some to the English camp; while Townshend pushed his trenches nearer and nearer to the walls, in spite of the cannonade with which Friedmont and his artillerymen tried to check them. On the evening of the seventeenth, the English ships of war moved towards the Lower Town, and a column of troops was seen approaching over the meadows of the St. Charles, as if to storm the Palace Gate. The drums beat the alarm; but the militia refused to fight. Their officers came to Ramesay in a body; declared that they had no mind to sustain an assault; that they knew he had orders against it; that they would carry their guns back to the arsenal; that they were no longer soldiers, but citizens; that if the army had not abandoned them they would fight with as much spirit as ever; but that they would not get themselves killed to no purpose. The town-major, Joannès, in a rage, beat two of them with the flat of his sword.

The white flag was raised; Joannès pulled it down, thinking, or pretending to think, that it was raised without authority; but Ramesay presently ordered him to go to the English camp and get what terms he could. He went, through driving rain, to the quarters of Townshend, and, in hope of the promised succor, spun out the negotiation to the utmost, pretended that he had no power to yield certain points demanded, and was at last sent back to confer with Ramesay, under a promise from the English commander that, if Quebec were not given up before eleven o'clock, he would take it by storm. On this Ramesay signed the articles, and Joannès carried them back within the time prescribed. Scarcely had he left the town, when the Canadian horsemen appeared with their sacks of biscuit and a renewed assurance that help was near; but it was too late. Ramesay had surrendered, and would not break his word. He dreaded an assault, which he knew he could not withstand, and he but half believed in the promised succor. "How could I trust it?" he asks. "The army had not dared to face the enemy before he had fortified himself, and could I hope that it would come to attack him in an intrenched camp, defended by a formidable artillery?" Whatever may be thought of his conduct, it was to Vaudreuil, and not to him, that the loss of Quebec was due.

¹ Lévis à Boullamaque, 18 Septembre, 1759

The conditions granted were favorable, for Townshend knew the danger of his position, and was glad to have Quebec on any terms. The troops and sailors of the garrison were to march out of the place with the honors of war, and to be carried to France. The inhabitants were to have protection in person and property, and free exercise of religion.¹

In the afternoon a company of artillerymen with a field-piece entered the town, and marched to the place of arms, followed by a body of infantry. Detachments took post at all the gates. The British flag was raised on the heights near the top of Mountain Street, and the capital of New France passed into the hands of its hereditary foes. The question remained, should they keep, or destroy it? It was resolved to keep it at every risk. The marines, the grenadiers from Louisbourg, and some of the rangers were to re-embark in the fleet; while the ten battalions, with the artillery and one company of rangers, were to remain behind, bide the Canadian winter, and defend the ruins of Quebec against the efforts of Lévis. Monckton, the oldest brigadier, was disabled by his wound, and could not stay; while Townshend returned home, to parade his laurels and claim more than his share of the honors of victory.² The command, therefore, rested with Murray.

The troops were not idle. Levelling their own field-works, repairing the defences of the town, storing provisions sent ashore from the fleet, making fascines, and cutting firewood, busied them through the autumn days bright with sunshine, or dark and chill with premonition of the bitter months to come. Admiral Saunders put off his departure longer than he had once thought possible; and it was past the middle of October when he fired a parting salute, and sailed down the river with his fleet. In it was the ship "Royal William," carrying the embalmed remains of Wolfe.

¹ Articles de Capitulation, 18 Septembre, 1759

² Letter to an Honourable Brigadier-General [Townshend], printed in 1760. A Refutation soon after appeared, angry, but not conclusive. Other replies will be found in the Imperial Magazine for 1760

Montcalm lay in his soldier's grave before the humble altar of the Ursulines, nevermore to see the home for which he yearned, the wife, mother, and children whom he loved, the olive-trees and chestnut-groves of his beloved Candiac. He slept in peace among triumphant enemies, who respected his memory, though they hardly knew his resting-place. It was left for a fellow-countryman — a colleague and a brother-in-arms — to belittle his achievements and blacken his name. The jealous spite of Vaudreuil pursued him even in death. Leaving Lévis to command at Jacques-Cartier, whither the army had again withdrawn, the governor retired to Montreal, whence he wrote a series of despatches to justify himself at the expense of others, and above all of the slain general, against whom his accusations were never so bitter as now, when the lips were cold that could have answered them. First, he threw on Ramesay all the blame of the surrender of Quebec. Then he addressed himself to his chief task, the defamation of his unconscious rival. "The letter that you wrote in cipher, on the tenth of February, to Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm and me, in common,¹ flattered his self-love to such a degree that, far from seeking conciliation, he did nothing but try to persuade the public that his authority surpassed mine. From the moment of Monsieur de Montcalm's arrival in this colony down to that of his death, he did not cease to sacrifice everything to his boundless ambition. He sowed dissension among the troops, tolerated the most indecent talk against the government, attached to himself the most disreputable persons, used means to corrupt the most virtuous, and, when he could not succeed, became their cruel enemy. He wanted to be Governor-General. He privately flattered with favors and promises of patronage every officer of the colony troops who adopted his ideas. He spared no pains to gain over the people of whatever calling, and persuade them of his attachment; while, either by himself or by means of the troops of the line, he made them bear the most frightful yoke (le joug le plus affreux). He defamed honest people, encouraged insubordination, and closed his eyes to the rapine of his soldiers."

This letter was written to Vaudreuil's official superior and confidant, the minister of the marine and colonies. In another letter, written about the same time to the minister of war, who held similar relations to his rival, he declares that he "greatly regretted Monsieur de Montcalm."²

¹ See ante, 174.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Guerre, 1 Novembre, 1759.

His charges are strange ones from a man who was by turns the patron, advocate, and tool of the official villains who cheated the King and plundered the people. Bigot, Cadet, and the rest of the harpies that preyed on Canada looked to Vaudreuil for support, and found it. It was but three or four weeks since he had written to the court in high eulogy of Bigot and effusive praise of Cadet, coupled with the request that a patent of nobility should be given to that notorious public thief.¹ The corruptions which disgraced his government were rife, not only in the civil administration, but also among the officers of the colony troops, over whom he had complete control. They did not, as has been seen already, extend to the officers of the line, who were outside the circle of speculation. It was these who were the habitual associates of Montcalm; and when Vaudreuil charges him with "attaching to himself the most disreputable persons, and using means to corrupt the most virtuous," the true interpretation of his words is that the former were disreputable because they disliked him (the governor), and the latter virtuous because they were his partisans.

Vaudreuil continues thus: "I am in despair, Monseigneur, to be under the necessity of painting you such a portrait after death of Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm. Though it contains the exact truth, I would have deferred it if his personal hatred to me were alone to be considered; but I feel too deeply the loss of the colony to hide from you the cause of it. I can assure you that if I had been the sole master, Quebec would still belong to the King, and that nothing is so disadvantageous in a colony as a division of authority and the mingling of troops of the line with marine [colony] troops. Thoroughly knowing Monsieur de Montcalm, I did not doubt in the least that unless I condescended to all his wishes, he would succeed in ruining Canada and wrecking all my plans."

¹ See ante, 84.

He then charges the dead man with losing the battle of Quebec by attacking before he, the governor, arrived to take command; and this, he says, was due to Montcalm's absolute determination to exercise independent authority, without caring whether the colony was saved or lost. "I cannot hide from you, Monseigneur, that if he had had his way in past years Oswego and Fort George [William Henry] would never have been attacked or taken; and he owed the success at Ticonderoga to the orders I had given him."¹ Montcalm, on the other hand, declared at the time that Vaudreuil had ordered him not to risk a battle, and that it was only through his disobedience that Ticonderoga was saved.

Ten days later Vaudreuil wrote again: "I have already had the honor, by my letter written in cipher on the thirtieth of last month, to give you a sketch of the character of Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm; but I have just been informed of a stroke so black that I think, Monseigneur, that I should fail in my duty to you if I did not tell you of it." He goes on to say that, a little before his death, and "no doubt in fear of the fate that befell him," Montcalm placed in the hands of Father Roubaud, missionary at St. Francis, two packets of papers containing remarks on the administration of the colony, and especially on the manner in which the military posts were furnished with supplies; that these observations were accompanied by certificates; and that they involved charges against him, the governor, of complicity in speculation. Roubaud, he continues, was to send these papers to France; "but now, Monseigneur, that you are informed about them, I feel no anxiety, and I am sure that the King will receive no impression from them without acquainting himself with their truth or falsity."

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 30 Octobre, 1750

Vaudreuil's anxiety was natural; and so was the action of Montcalm in making known to the court the outrageous abuses that threatened the King's service with ruin. His doing so was necessary, both for his own justification and for the public good; and afterwards, when Vaudreuil and others were brought to trial at Paris, and when one of the counsel for the defence charged the late general with slanderously accusing his clients, the court ordered the charge to be struck from the record.¹ The papers the existence of which, if they did exist, so terrified Vaudreuil, have thus far escaped research. But the correspondence of the two rivals with the chiefs of the departments on which they severally depended is in large measure preserved; and while that of the governor is filled with defamation of Montcalm and praise of himself, that of the general is neither egotistic nor abusive. The faults of Montcalm have sufficiently appeared. They were those of an impetuous, excitable, and impatient nature, by no means free from either ambition or vanity; but they were never inconsistent with the character of a man of honor. His impulsive utterances, reported by retainers and sycophants, kept Vaudreuil in a state of chronic rage; and, void as he was of all magnanimity, gnawed with undying jealousy, and mortally in dread of being compromised by the knaveries to which he had lent his countenance, he could not contain himself within the bounds of decency or sense. In another letter he had the baseness to say that Montcalm met his death in trying to escape from the English.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres.

Among the governor's charges are some which cannot be flatly denied. When he accuses his rival of haste and precipitation in attacking the English army, he touches a fair subject of criticism; but, as a whole, he is as false in his detraction of Montcalm as in his praises of Bigot and Cadet.

The letter which Wolfe sent to Pitt a few days before his death, written in what may be called a spirit of resolute despair, and representing success as almost hopeless, filled England with a dejection that found utterance in loud grumblings against the ministry. Horace Walpole wrote the bad news to his friend Mann, ambassador at Florence: "Two days ago came letters from Wolfe, despairing as much as heroes can despair. Quebec is well victualled, Amherst is not arrived, and fifteen thousand men are encamped to defend it. We have lost many men by the enemy, and some by our friends; that is, we now call our nine thousand only seven thousand. How this little army will get away from a much larger, and in this season, in that country, I don't guess: yes, I do."

Hardly were these lines written when tidings came that Montcalm was defeated, Quebec taken, and Wolfe killed. A flood of mixed emotion swept over England. Even Walpole grew half serious as he sent a packet of newspapers to his friend the ambassador. "You may now give yourself what airs you please. An ambassador is the only man in the world whom bullying becomes. All precedents are on your side. Persians, Greeks, Romans, always insulted their neighbors when they took Quebec. Think how pert the French would have been on such an occasion! What a scene! An army in the night dragging itself up a precipice by stumps of trees to assault a town and attack an enemy strongly intrenched and double in numbers! The King is overwhelmed with addresses on our victories; he will have enough to paper his palace."¹

When, in soberer mood, he wrote the annals of his time, and turned, not for the better, from the epistolary style to the historical, he thus described the impression made on the English public by the touching and inspiring story of Wolfe's heroism and death: "The incidents of dramatic fiction could not be conducted with more address to lead an audience from despondency to sudden exaltation than accident prepared to excite the passions of a whole people. They despaired, they triumphed, and they wept; for Wolfe had fallen in the hour of victory. Joy, curiosity, astonishment, was painted on every countenance. The more they inquired, the more their admiration rose. Not an incident but was heroic and affecting."¹ England blazed with bonfires. In one spot alone all was dark and silent; for here a widowed mother mourned for a loving and devoted son, and the people forbore to profane her grief with the clamor of their rejoicings.

¹ Letters of Horace Walpole, iii. 264, 267 (ed. Cunningham, 1857).

New England had still more cause of joy than Old, and she filled the land with jubilation. The pulpits resounded with sermons of thanksgiving, some of which were worthy of the occasion that called them forth. Among the rest, Jonathan Mayhew, a young but justly celebrated minister of Boston, pictured with enthusiasm the future greatness of the British-American colonies, with the continent thrown open before them, and foretold that, "with the continued blessing of Heaven, they will become, in another century or two, a mighty empire;" adding in cautious parenthesis, "I do not mean an independent one." He read Wolfe's victory aright, and divined its far-reaching consequence.

¹ Walpole, Memoirs of George II., ii. 384.

NOTE — The authorities of this chapter are, in the main, the same as those of the preceding, with some additions, the principal of which is the Mémoire du Sieur de Ramezay, Chevalier de l'Ordre royal et militaire de St-Louis, cy-devant Lieutenant pour le Roy commandant à Québec, au sujet de la Reddition de cette Ville, qui a été suivie de la Capitulation du 18 7^{bre}, 1759 (Archives de la Marine). To this document are appended a number of important "pièces justificatives" These, with the Mémoire, have been printed by the Quebec Historical Society The letters of Vaudreuil cited in this chapter are chiefly from the Archives Nationales.

If Montcalm, as Vaudreuil says, really intrusted papers to the care of the Jesuit missionary Roubaud, he was not fortunate in his choice of a depositary After the war Roubaud renounced his Order, abjured his faith, and went over to the English He gave various and contradictory accounts of the documents said to be in his hands. On one occasion he declared that Montcalm's effects left with him at his mission of St Francis had been burned to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy (see Verreau, Report on Canadian Archives, 1874, 188) Again, he says that he had placed in the hands of the King of England certain letters of Montcalm (see Mr. Roubaud's Deplorable Case, humbly submitted to Lord North's consideration, in Historical Magazine, Second Series, viii. 288) Yet again, he speaks of these same letters as "pretended" (Verreau, as above). He complains that some of them had been published, without his consent, "by a Lord belonging to His Majesty's household" (Mr. Roubaud's Deplorable Case).

The allusion here is evidently to a pamphlet printed in London, in 1777 in French and English, and entitled, Lettres de Monsieur le Marquis de Montcalm, Gouverneur-Général en Canada, à Messieurs de Berryer et de la Molé, écrites dans les Années 1757, 1758, et 1759, avec une Version Angloise They profess to be observations by Montcalm on the English colonies, their political character, their trade, and their tendency to independence. They bear the strongest marks of being fabricated to suit the times, the colonies being then in revolt. The principal letter is one addressed to Molé, and bearing date Quebec, August 24, 1759. It foretells the loss of her colonies as a consequence to England of her probable conquest of Canada. I laid before the Massachusetts Historical Society my reasons for believing this letter, like the rest, an imposture (see the Proceedings of that Society for 1869-1870, 112-128). To these reasons it may be added that at the date assigned to the letter all correspondence was stopped between Canada and France. From the arrival of the English fleet, at the end of spring, till its departure, late in autumn, communication was completely cut off. It was not till towards the end of November, when the river was clear of English ships, that the naval commander Kanon ran by the batteries of Quebec and carried to France the first news from Canada. Some of the letters thus sent were dated a month before, and had waited in Canada till Kanon's departure.

Abbé Verreau — a high authority on questions of Canadian history — tells me a comparison of the handwriting has convinced him that these pretended letters of Montcalm are the work of Roubaud.

On the burial of Montcalm, see Appendix J.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1759, 1760.

SAINTE-FOY.

QUEBEC AFTER THE SIEGE. — CAPTAIN KNOX AND THE NUNS. — ESCAPE OF FRENCH SHIPS — WINTER AT QUEBEC — THREATS OF LÉVIS — ATTACKS — SKIRMISHES — FEAT OF THE RANGERS — STATE OF THE GARRISON — THE FRENCH PREPARE TO RETAKE QUEBEC. — ADVANCE OF LÉVIS — THE ALARM — SORTIE OF THE ENGLISH — RASH DETERMINATION OF MURRAY — BATTLE OF STE-FOY — RETREAT OF THE ENGLISH — LÉVIS BESIEGES QUEBEC — SPIRIT OF THE GARRISON — PERIL OF THEIR SITUATION. — RELIEF — QUEBEC SAVED. — RETREAT OF LÉVIS — THE NEWS IN ENGLAND.

THE fleet was gone; the great river was left a solitude; and the chill days of a fitful November passed over Quebec in alternations of rain and frost, sunshine and snow. The troops, driven by cold from their encampment on the Plains, were all gathered within the walls. Their own artillery had so battered the place that it was not easy to find shelter. The Lower Town was a wilderness of scorched and crumbling walls. As you ascended Mountain Street, the Bishop's Palace, on the right, was a skeleton of tottering masonry, and the buildings on the left were a mass of ruin, where ragged boys were playing at sec-along the fallen planks and timbers.¹ Even in Upper Town few of the churches and public buildings had escaped. The Cathedral was burned to the ground. The solid front of the College of the Holy Trinity was pockmarked by numberless cannon-balls, and the adjacent church of the Order was wofully ruined. The church of the Récollets suffered more. The bombshells that fell through the roof and broken into the pavement, and as they burst threw up the bones and skulls of the dead from the vaults beneath.² Even the more distant Hôtel-Dieu was pierced by fifteen projectiles, some of which exploded in the halls and chambers.³

The commissary-general, Berniers, thus describes Bourlamaque the state of the town: "Quebec is now but a shapeless mass of ruins. Confusion, anarchy, pillage, reign even among the inhabitants, and the English make examples of severity every day. Everybody rushes hither and thither, without knowing why. Each searches for his possessions, not finding his own, seizes those of other people. English and French, all is chaos alike. The inhabitants, famished and destitute, escape to the country. There was there seen such a sight."⁴

Quebec swarmed with troops. There were guard-drawings made on the spot by Richard Short. These drawings, in number, were engraved and published in 1761. Short's Views in Quebec, 1759. Compare Pontbriand, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Proc., x. 1,057.

de la Graine, Hôtel-Dieu de Quebec, 445.
Berniers à Bourlamaque, 27 Septembre, 1759.

houses at twenty different points; sentinels paced the ramparts, squads of men went the rounds, soldiers off duty strolled the streets, some in mitre caps and some in black three-cornered hats; while a ceaseless rolling of drums and a rigid observance of military forms betrayed the sense of a still imminent danger. While some of the inhabitants left town, others remained, having no refuge elsewhere. They were civil to the victors, but severe towards their late ruler. "The citizens," says Knox, "particularly the females, reproach M. Vaudreuil upon every occasion, and give full scope to bitter invectives." He praises the agreeable manners and cheerful spirit of the Canadian ladies, concerning whom another officer also writes: "It is very surprising with what ease the gayety of their tempers enables them to bear misfortunes which to us would be insupportable. Families whom the calamities of war have reduced from the height of luxury to the want of common necessaries laugh, dance, and sing, comforting themselves with this reflection — Fortune de guerre. Their young ladies take the utmost pains to teach our officers French; with what view I know not, if it is not that they may hear themselves praised, flattered, and courted without loss of time."¹

Knox was quartered in a small stable, with a hay-loft above and a rack and manger at one end: a

¹ Alexander Campbell to John Lloyd, 22 October, 1759 Campbell was a lieutenant of the Highlanders; Lloyd was a Connecticut merchant

ing better than fell to the lot of many of his other officers; and, by means of a stove and some from a carpenter, he says that he made himself remarkably comfortable. The change, however, was agreeable one when he was ordered for a week to General Hospital, a mile out of the town, where was to command the guard stationed to protect inmates and watch the enemy. Here were gathered the sick and wounded of both armies, nursed with equal care by the nuns, of whom Knox speaks with gratitude and respect. "When our poor fellows were ill and ordered to be removed from their odious regimental hospital to this general receptacle, they were indeed rendered inexpressibly happy. Each patient has his bed, with curtains, allotted to him, and a nurse to attend him. Every sick or wounded soldier has an apartment to himself, and is attended by one of these religious sisters, who in general are young, handsome, courteous, rigidly reserved, and most respectful. Their office of nursing the sick affords them with opportunities of taking great pleasure if they are so disposed; but I never heard of them charged with the least levity." The nuns, on their part, were well pleased with the conduct of their new masters, whom one of them describes as the "most moderate of all conquerors." "I lived here," Knox continues, "at the French king's table, with an agreeable, polite society of officers, directors, and commissaries. Some of the gentlemen were married, and their ladies honored us with their company. They were generally cheerful, except when we discoursed on the late revolution and the affairs of the campaign; then they seemingly gave way to grief, uttered by profound sighs, followed by an O mon Dieu !" He walked in the garden with the French officers, played at cards with them, and passed the time so pleasantly that his short stay at the hospital seemed an oasis in his hard life of camp and garrison.

Mère de Sainte-Claude, the Superior, a sister of Ramesay, late commandant of Quebec, one morning sent him a note of invitation to what she called an English breakfast; and though the repast answered to nothing within his experience, he says that he "fared exceedingly well, and passed near two hours most agreeably in the society of this ancient lady and her virgin sisters."

The excellent nuns of the General Hospital are to-day what their predecessors were, and the scene of their useful labors still answers at many points to that described by the careful pen of their military guest. Throughout the war they and the nuns of the Hôtel-Dieu had been above praise in their assiduous devotion to the sick and wounded.

Brigadier Murray, now in command of Quebec, was a gallant soldier, upright, humane, generous, eager for distinction, and more daring than prudent. He befriended the Canadians, issued strict orders against harming them in person or property, hanged a soldier who had robbed a citizen of Quebec, and severely punished others for slighter offences of the same sort. In general the soldiers themselves showed kindness towards the conquered people; during harvest they were seen helping them to reap their fields, without compensation, and sharing with them their tobacco and rations. The inhabitants were disarmed, and required to take the oath of allegiance. Murray reported in the spring that the whole country, from Cap-Rouge downward, was in subjection to the British Crown.¹

Late in October it was rumored that some of the French ships in the river above Quebec were preparing to run by the batteries. This was the squadron which had arrived in the spring with supplies, and had lain all summer at Batiscan, in the Richelieu, and at other points beyond reach of the English. After nearly a month of expectancy, they at length appeared, anchored off Sillery on the twenty-first of November, and tried to pass the town on the dark night of the twenty-fourth. Seven or eight of them succeeded; four others ran aground and were set on fire by their crews, excepting one which was stranded on the south shore and abandoned. Captain Miller, with a lieutenant and above forty men, boarded her; when, apparently through their own carelessness, she blew up.² Most of the party were killed by the explosion, and the rest, including the two officers,

¹ Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760 Murray, Journal, 1759, 1760.

² Murray to Amherst, 25 January, 1760. Not, as some believed, by a train laid by the French were left in a horrible condition between life and death. Thus they remained till a Canadian, venturing on board in search of plunder, found them, called his neighbors to his aid, carried them to his own house, and after applying, with the utmost kindness, what simple remedies he knew, went over to Quebec and told of the disaster. Fortunately for themselves, the sufferers soon died.

December came, and brought the Canadian winter, with its fierce light and cold, glaring snowfields, and piercing blasts that scorch the cheek like a firebrand. The men were frost-bitten as they dug away the dry, powdery drifts that the wind had piled against the rampart. The sentries were relieved every hour; yet feet and fingers were continually frozen. The clothing of the troops was ill-suited to the climate, and, though stoves had been placed in the guard and barrack rooms, the supply of fuel constantly fell short. The cutting and dragging of wood was the chief task of the garrison for many weeks. Parties of axemen, strongly guarded, were always at work in the forest of Ste.-Foy, four or five miles from Quebec, and the logs were brought to town on sledges dragged by the soldiers. Eight of them were harnessed in pairs to each sledge; and as there was always danger from Indians and bush-rangers, every man carried his musket slung at his back. The labor was prodigious; for frequent snowstorms made it necessary again and again to beat a fresh track through the drifts. The men bore their hardships with admirable good humor; and once a party of them on their return, dragging their load through the street, met a Canadian, also with a load of wood, which was drawn by a team of dogs harnessed much like themselves. They accosted them as yoke-fellows, comrades, and brothers; asked them what allowance of pork and rum they got; and invited them and their owner to mess at the regimental barracks.

The appearance of the troops on duty within the town, as described by Knox, was scarcely less eccentric. "Our guards on the grand parade make a most grotesque appearance in their different dresses; and our inventions to guard us against the extreme rigor of this climate are various beyond imagination. The uniformity as well as nicety of the clean, methodical soldier is buried in the rough, fur-wrought garb of the frozen Laplander; and we rather resemble a masquerade than a body of regular troops, insomuch that I have frequently been accosted by my acquaintances, whom, though their voices were familiar to me, I could not discover, or conceive who they were. Besides, every man seems to be in a continual hurry; for instead of walking soberly through the streets, we are obliged to observe a running or trotting pace."

Early in January there was a storm of sleet, followed by severe frost, which glazed the streets with ice. Knox, being ordered to mount guard in the Lower Town, found the descent of Mountain Street so slippery that it was impossible to walk down with safety, especially as the muskets of the men were loaded; and the whole party, seating themselves on the ground, slid one after another to the foot of the hill. The Highlanders, in spite of their natural hardihood, suffered more from the cold than the other troops, as their national costume was but a sorry defence against the Canadian winter. A detachment of these breechless warriors being on guard at the General Hospital, the nuns spent their scanty leisure in knitting for them long woollen hose, which they gratefully accepted, though at a loss to know whether modesty or charity inspired the gift.

From the time when the English took possession of Quebec, reports had come in through deserters that Lévis meant to attack and recover it. Early in November there was a rumor that he was about to march upon it with fifteen thousand men. In December word came that he was on his way, resolved to storm it on or about the twenty-second, and dine within the walls, under the French flag, on Christmas Day. He failed to appear; but in January a deserter said that he had prepared scaling-ladders, and was training his men to use them by assaults on mock ramparts of snow. There was more tangible evidence that the enemy was afoot. Murray had established two fortified outposts, one at Ste.-Foy, and the other farther on, at Old Lorette. War-parties hovered round both, and kept the occupants in alarm. A large body of French grenadiers appeared at the latter place in February, and drove off a herd of cattle; when a detachment of rangers, much inferior in number, set upon them, put them to flight, and recovered the plunder. At the same time a party of regulars, Canadians, and Indians took up a strong position near the church at Point Levi, and sent a message to the English officers that a large company of expert hairdressers were ready to wait upon them whenever they required their services. The allusion was of course to the scalp-lifting practices of the Indians and bush-rangers.

The river being now hard frozen, Murray sent over a detachment of light infantry under Major Dalling. A sharp fight ensued on the snow, around the church, and in the neighboring forest, where the English soldiers, taught to use snowshoes by the rangers, routed the enemy, and killed or captured a considerable number. A third post was then established at the church and the priest's house adjacent. Some days after, the French came back in large numbers, fortified themselves with felled trees, and then attacked the English position. The firing being heard at Quebec, the light infantry went over to the scene of action, and Murray himself followed on the ice, with the Highlanders and other troops. Before he came up, the French drew off and retreated to their breastwork, where they were attacked and put to flight, the nimble Highlanders capturing a few, while the greater part made their escape.

As it became known that the French held a strong post at Le Calvaire, near St. Augustin, two days' march from Quebec, Captain Donald MacDonald was sent with five hundred men to attack it. He found the enemy behind a breastwork of logs protected by an abattis. The light infantry advanced and poured in a brisk fire; on which the French threw down their arms and fled. About eighty of them were captured; but their commander, Herbin, escaped, leaving to the victors his watch, hat and feather, wine, liquor-case, and mistress. The English had six men wounded and nearly a hundred frost-bitten.¹

Captain Hazen and his rangers soon after had a notable skirmish. They were posted in a house not far from the station at Lorette. A scout came in with news that a large party of the enemy was coming to attack them; on which Hazen left a sergeant and fourteen men in the house, and set out for Lorette with the rest to ask a reinforcement. On the way he met the French, who tried to surround him; and he told his men to fall back to the house. They remonstrated, saying that they "felt spry," and wanted to show the regulars that provincials could fight as well as red-coats. Thereupon they charged the enemy, gave them a close volley of buckshot and bullets, and put them to flight; but scarcely had they reloaded their guns when they were fired upon from behind. Another body of assailants had got into their rear, in order to cut them off.

¹ Knox, ii. 275. Murray, Journal. Fraser, Journal. Vaudreuil, in his usual way, multiplies the English force by three.

They faced about, attacked them, and drove them back like the first. The two French parties then joined forces, left Hazen to pursue his march, and attacked the fourteen rangers in the house, who met them with a brisk fire. Hazen and his men heard the noise; and, hastening back, fell upon the rear of the French, while those in the house sallied and attacked them in front. They were again routed; and the rangers chased them two miles, killing six of them and capturing seven. Knox, in whose eyes provincials usually find no favor, launches this time into warm commendation of "our simply honest New England men."

Fresh reports came in from time to time that the French were gathering all their strength to recover Quebec; and late in February these stories took a definite shape. A deserter from Montreal brought Murray a letter from an officer of rangers, who was a prisoner at that place, warning him that eleven thousand men were on the point of marching to attack him. Three other deserters soon after confirmed the news, but added that the scheme had met with a check; for as it was intended to carry the town by storm, a grand rehearsal had taken place, with the help of scaling-ladders planted against the wall of a church; whereupon the Canadians rushed with such zeal to the assault that numerous broken legs, arms, and heads ensued, along with ruptures, sprains, bruises, and dislocations; insomuch, said the story, that they became disgusted with the attempt.

All remained quiet till after the middle of April, when the garrison was startled by repeated assurances that at the first breaking up of the ice all Canada would be upon them. Murray accordingly ordered the French inhabitants to leave the town within three days.¹

In some respects the temper of the troops was excellent. In the petty warfare of the past winter they had generally been successful, proving themselves a match for the bush-rangers and Indians on their own ground; so that, as Sergeant Johnson remarks, in his odd way, "Very often a small number of our men would put to flight a considerable party of those Cannibals." They began to think themselves invincible; yet they had the deepest cause for anxiety. The effective strength of the garrison was reduced to less than half, and of those that remained fit for duty, hardly a man was entirely free from scurvy. The rank and file had no fresh provisions; and, in spite of every precaution, this malignant disease, aided by fever and dysentery, made no less havoc among them than among the crews of Jacques-Cartier at this same place two centuries before. Of about seven thousand men left at Quebec in the autumn, scarcely more than three thousand were fit for duty on the twenty-fourth of April.²

¹ Ordonnance faite à Québec le 21 Avril, 1760, par son Excellence, Jacques Murray.

² Return of the Present State of His Majesty's Forces in Garrison at Quebec, 24 April, 1760 (Public Record Office).

About seven hundred had found temporary burial in the snowdrifts, as the frozen ground was impenetrable as a rock.

Meanwhile Vaudreuil was still at Montreal, where he says that he "arrived just in time to take the most judicious measures and prevent General Amherst from penetrating into the colony."¹ During the winter some of the French regulars were kept in garrison at the outposts, and the rest quartered on the inhabitants; while the Canadians were dismissed to their homes, subject to be mustered again at the call of the governor. Both he and Lévis were full of the hope of retaking Quebec. He had spies and agents among Murray's soldiers; and though the citizens had sworn allegiance to King George, some of them were exceedingly useful to his enemies. Vaudreuil had constant information of the state of the garrison. He knew that the scurvy was his active and powerful ally, and that the hospitals and houses of Quebec were crowded with the sick. At the end of March he was informed that more than half the British were on the sick-list; and it was presently rumored that Murray had only two thousand men able to bear arms.² With every allowance for exaggeration in these reports, it was plain that the French could attack their invaders in overwhelming force.

The difficulty was to find means of transportation.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Octobre, 1759.

² Ibid, 15 Avril, 1760.

The depth of the snow and the want of draught animals made it necessary to wait till the river should become navigable; but preparation was begun at once. Lévis was the soul of the enterprise. Provisions were gathered from far and near; cannon, mortars, and munitions of war were brought from the frontier posts, and butcher-knives were fitted to the muzzles of guns to serve the Canadians in place of bayonets. All the workmen about Montreal were busied in making tools and gun-carriages. Stores were impressed from the merchants; and certain articles, which could not otherwise be had, were smuggled, with extraordinary address, out of Quebec itself.¹ Early in spring the militia received orders to muster for the march. There were doubts and discontent; but, says a contemporary, "sensible people dared not speak, for if they did they were set down as English." Some there were who in secret called the scheme "Lévis' folly;" yet it was perfectly rational, well conceived, and conducted with vigor and skill. Two frigates, two sloops-of-war, and a number of smaller craft still remained in the river, under command of Vauquelin, the brave officer who had distinguished himself at the siege of Louisbourg. The stores and cannon were placed on board these vessels, the army embarked in a fleet of bateaux, and on the twentieth of April the whole set out together for the scene of action. They comprised eight battalions of troops of the line and two of colony troops; with the colonial artillery, three thousand Canadians, and four hundred Indians. When they left Montreal, their effective strength, besides Indians, is said by Lévis to have been six thousand nine hundred and ten, a number which was increased as he advanced by the garrisons of Jacques-Cartier, Deschambault, and Pointe-aux-Trembles, as well as by the Canadians on both sides of the St. Lawrence below Three Rivers; for Vaudreuil had ordered the militia captains to join his standard, with all their followers, armed and equipped, on pain of death.¹ These accessions appear to have raised his force to between eight and nine thousand.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 23 Avril, 1760.

The ice still clung to the river-banks, the weather was bad, and the navigation difficult; but on the twenty-sixth the army landed at St. Augustin, crossed the river of Cap-Rouge on bridges of their own making, and moved upon the English outpost at Old Lorette. The English abandoned it and fell back to Ste.-Foy. Lévis followed. Night came on, with a gale from the southeast, a driving rain, and violent thunder, unusual at that season. The road, a bad and broken one, led through the marsh called La Suède. Causeways and bridges broke down under the weight of the marching columns and plunged the men into water, mud, and half-thawed ice. "It was a frightful night," says Lévis; "so dark that but for the flashes of lightning we should have been forced to stop." The break of day found the vanguard at the edge of the woods bordering the farther side of the marsh. The storm had abated; and they saw before them, a few hundred yards distant, through the misty air, a ridge of rising ground on which stood the parish church of Ste.-Foy, with a row of Canadian houses stretching far to right and left. This ridge was the declivity of the plateau of Quebec; the same which as it approaches the town, some five or six miles towards the left, takes the names of Côte d'Abraham and Côte Ste.-Geneviève. The church and the houses were occupied by British troops, who, as the French debouched from the woods, opened on them with cannon, and compelled them to fall back. Though the ridge at this point is not steep, the position was a strong one; but had Lévis known how few were as yet there to oppose him, he might have carried it by an assault in front. As it was, he resolved to wait till night, and then flank the enemy by a march to the right along the border of the wood.

¹ Vaudreuil aux Capitaines de Milice, 16 Avril, 1760. I am indebted to Abbé H. R. Casgrain for a copy of this letter.

It was the morning of Sunday, the twenty-seventh. Till late in the night before, Murray and the garrison of Quebec were unaware of the immediate danger; and they learned it at last through a singular stroke of fortune. Some time after midnight the watch on board the frigate "Racehorse," which had wintered in the dock at the Lower Town, heard a feeble cry of distress from the midst of the darkness that covered the St. Lawrence. Captain Macartney was at once informed of it; and, through an impulse of humanity, he ordered a boat to put out amid the drifting ice that was sweeping up the river with the tide. Guided by the faint cries, the sailors found a man lying on a large cake of ice, drenched, and half dead with cold; and, taking him with difficulty into their boat, they carried him to the ship. It was long before he was able to speak intelligibly; but at last, being revived by cordials and other remedies, he found strength to tell his benefactors that he was a sergeant of artillery in the army that had come to retake Quebec; that in trying to land a little above Cap-Rouge, his boat had been upset, his companions drowned, and he himself saved by climbing upon the cake of ice where they had discovered him; that he had been borne by the ebb tide down to the Island of Orleans, and then brought up to Quebec by the flow; and, finally, that Lévis was marching on the town with twelve thousand men at his back.

He was placed in a hammock and carried up Mountain Street to the quarters of the general, who was roused from sleep at three o'clock in the morning to hear his story. The troops were ordered under arms; and soon after daybreak Murray marched out with ten pieces of cannon and more than half the garrison. His principal object was to withdraw the advanced posts at Ste.-Foy, Cap-Rouge, Sillery, and Anse du Foulon. The storm had turned to a cold, drizzling rain, and the men, as they dragged their cannon through snow and mud, were soon drenched to the skin. On reaching Ste.-Foy, they opened a brisk fire from the heights upon the woods which now covered the whole army of Lévis; and being rejoined by the various outposts, returned to Quebec in the afternoon, after blowing up the church, which contained a store of munitions that they had no means of bringing off. When they entered Quebec a gill of rum was served out to each man; several houses in the suburb of St. Roch were torn down to supply them with firewood for drying their clothes; and they were left to take what rest they could against the morrow. The French, meanwhile, took possession of the abandoned heights; and while some filled the houses, barns, and sheds of Ste.-Foy and its neighborhood, others, chiefly Canadians, crossed the plateau to seek shelter in the village of Sillery.

Three courses were open to Murray. He could defend Quebec, fortify himself outside the walls on the Buttes-à-Neveu, or fight Lévis at all risks. The walls of Quebec could not withstand a cannonade, and he had long intended to intrench his army on the Buttes, as a better position of defence; but the ground, frozen like a rock, had thus far made the plan impracticable. Even now, though the surface was thawed, the soil beneath was still frost-bound, making the task of fortification extremely difficult, if indeed the French would give him time for it. Murray was young in years, and younger still in impulse. He was ardent, fearless, ambitious, and emulous of the fame of Wolfe. "The enemy," he soon after wrote to Pitt, "was greatly superior in number, it is true; but when I considered that our little army was in the habit of beating that enemy, and had a very fine train of field artillery; that shutting ourselves at once within the walls was putting all upon the single chance of holding out for a considerable time a wretched fortification, I resolved to give them battle; and, half an hour after six in the morning, we marched with all the force I could muster, namely, three thousand men."¹ Some of these had left the hospitals of their own accord in their eagerness to take part in the fray.

The rain had ceased; but as the column emerged from St. Louis Gate, the scene before them was a dismal one. As yet there was no sign of spring. Each leafless bush and tree was dark with clammy moisture; patches of bare earth lay oozy and black on the southern slopes: but elsewhere the ground was still covered with snow, in some places piled in drifts, and everywhere sodden with rain; while each hollow and depression was full of that half-liquid, lead-colored mixture of snow and water which New England schoolboys call "slush," for all drainage was stopped by the frozen subsoil. The troops had with them two howitzers and twenty field-pieces, which had been captured when Quebec surrendered, and had formed a part of that very battery which Ramesay refused to Montcalm at the battle of the autumn before. As there were no horses, the cannon were dragged by some of the soldiers, while others carried picks and spades; for as yet Murray seems not to have made up his mind whether to fortify or fight. Thus they advanced nearly half a mile; till reaching the Buttes-à-Neveu, they formed in order of battle along their farther slopes, on the same ground that Montcalm had occupied on the morning of his death.

¹ Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760.

Murray went forward to reconnoitre. Immediately before him was a rising ground, and, beyond it, a tract of forest called Sillery Wood, a mile or more distant. Nearer, on the left, he could see two blockhouses built by the English in the last autumn, not far from the brink of the plateau above the Anse du Foulon where Wolfe climbed the heights. On the right, at the opposite brink of the plateau, was a house and a fortified windmill belonging to one Dumont. The blockhouses, the mill, and the rising ground between them were occupied by the vanguard of Lévis' army; while, behind, he could descry the main body moving along the road from Ste.-Foy, then turning, battalion after battalion, and rapidly marching across the plateau along the edge of Sillery Wood. The two brigades of the leading column had already reached the blockhouses by the Anse du Foulon, and formed themselves as the right wing of the French line of battle; but those behind were not yet in position.

Murray, kindling at the sight, thought that so favorable a moment was not to be lost, and ordered an advance. His line consisted of eight battalions, numbering a little above two thousand. In the intervals between them the cannon were dragged through slush and mud by five hundred men; and, at a little distance behind, the remaining two battalions followed as a reserve. The right flank was covered by Dalling's light infantry; the left by Hazen's company of rangers and a hundred volunteers under Major MacDonald. They all moved forward till they were on nearly the same ground where Wolfe's army had been drawn up. Then the cannon unlimbered, and opened on the French with such effect that Lévis, who was on horseback in the middle of the field, sent orders to the corps of his left to fall back to the cover of the woods. The movement caused some disorder. Murray mistook it for retreat, and commanded a farther advance. The whole British line, extending itself towards the right, pushed eagerly forward: in doing which it lost the advantage of the favorable position it had occupied; and the battalions of the right soon found themselves on low grounds, wading in half-melted snow, which in some parts was knee deep. Here the cannon could no longer be worked with effect. Just in front, a small brook ran along the hollow, through soft mud and saturated snow-drifts, then gurgled down the slope on the right, to lose itself in the meadows of the St. Charles. A few rods before this brook stood the house and windmill of Dumont, occupied by five companies of French grenadiers. The light infantry at once attacked them. A furious struggle ensued, till at length the French gave way, and the victors dashed forward to follow up their advantage. Their ardor cost them dear. The corps on the French left, which had fallen back into the woods, now advanced again as the cannon ceased to play, rushing on without order but with the utmost impetuosity, led by a gallant old officer, Colonel Dalquier, of the battalion of Béarn. A bullet in the body could not stop him. The light infantry were overwhelmed; and such of them as were left alive were driven back in confusion upon the battalions behind them, along the front of which they remained dispersed for some minutes, preventing the troops from firing on the advancing French, who thus had time to reform their ranks. At length the light infantry got themselves out of the way and retired to the rear, where, having lost nearly all their officers, they remained during the rest of the fight. Another struggle followed for the house and mill of Dumont, of which the French again got possession, to be again driven out; and it remained, as if by mutual consent, unoccupied for some time by either party. For above an hour more the fight was hot and fierce. "We drove them back as long as we had ammunition for our cannon," says Sergeant Johnson; but now it failed, and no more was to be had, because, in the eccentric phrase of the sergeant, the tumbrils were "bogged in deep pits of snow."

While this was passing on the English right, it fared still worse with them on the left. The advance of the line was no less disastrous here than there. It brought the troops close to the woods which circled round to this point from the French rear, and from which the Canadians, covered by the trees, now poured on them a deadly fire. Here, as on the right, Lévis had ordered his troops to fall back for a time; but when the fire of the English cannon ceased, they advanced again, and their artillery, though consisting of only three pieces, played its part with good effect. Hazen's rangers and MacDonald's volunteers attacked and took the two adjacent blockhouses, but could not hold them. Hazen was wounded, MacDonald killed, and their party overpowered. The British battalions held their ground till the French, whose superior numbers enabled them to extend themselves on both sides beyond the English line, made a furious attack on the left wing, in front and flank. The reserves were ordered up, and the troops stood for a time in sullen desperation under the storm of bullets; but they were dropping fast in the blood-stained snow, and the order came at length to fall back. They obeyed with curses: "Damn it, what is falling back but retreating?"¹ The right wing, also outflanked, followed the example of the left. Some of the corps tried to drag off their cannon; but being prevented by the deep mud and snow, they spiked the pieces and abandoned them. The French followed close, hoping to cut off the fugitives from the gates of Quebec; till Lévis, seeing that the retreat, though precipitate, was not entirely without order, thought best to stop the pursuit.

¹ Knox, ii. 295.

The fight lasted about two hours, and did credit to both sides. The Canadians not only showed their usual address and courage when under cover of woods, but they also fought well in the open field; and the conduct of the whole French force proved how completely they had recovered from the panic of the last autumn. From the first they were greatly superior in number, and at the middle and end of the affair, when they had all reached the field, they were more than two against one.¹ The English, on the other hand, besides the opportunity of attacking before their enemies had completely formed, had a vastly superior artillery and a favorable position, both which advantages they lost after their second advance.

Some curious anecdotes are told of the retreat. Colonel Fraser, of the Highlanders, received a bullet which was no doubt half spent, and which, with excellent precision, hit the base of his queue, so deadening the shock that it gave him no other inconvenience than a stiff neck. Captain Hazen, of the rangers, badly wounded, was making his way towards the gate, supported by his servant, when he saw at a great distance a French officer leading a file of men across a rising ground; whereupon he stopped and told the servant to give him his gun. A volunteer named Thompson, who was near by and who tells the story, thought that he was out of his senses; but Hazen persisted, seated himself on the ground, took a long aim, fired, and brought down his man. Thompson congratulated him. "A chance shot may kill the devil," replied Hazen; and resigning himself again to the arms of his attendant, he reached the town, recovered from his wound, and lived to be a general of the Revolution.¹

¹ See Appendix, K,

The English lost above a thousand, or more than a third of their whole number, killed, wounded, and missing.² They carried off some of their wounded, but left others behind; and the greater part of these were murdered, scalped, and mangled by the Indians, all of whom were converts from the mission villages. English writers put the French loss at two thousand and upwards, which is no doubt a gross exaggeration. Lévis declares that the number did not exceed six or eight hundred; but afterwards gives a list which makes it eight hundred and thirty-three.

Murray had left three or four hundred men to guard Quebec when the rest marched out; and adding them to those who had returned scathless from the fight, he now had about twenty-four hundred rank and file fit for duty. Yet even the troops that were rated as effective were in so bad a condition that the hyperbolic Sergeant Johnson calls them

¹ Thompson, deceived by Hazen's baptismal name, Moses, thought that he was a Jew. (Revue Canadienne, iv. 805) He was, however, of an old New England Puritan family. See the Hazen genealogy in Historic-Genealogical Register, xxxiii.

² Return of Killed, Wounded, and Missing, signed J. Murray.

"half-starved, scorbutic skeletons." That worthy soldier, commonly a model of dutiful respect to those above him, this time so far forgets himself as to criticise his general for the "mad, enthusiastic zeal" by which he nearly lost the fruits of Wolfe's victory. In fact, the fate of Quebec trembled in the balance. "We were too few and weak to stand an assault," continues Johnson, "and we were almost in as deep a distress as we could be." At first there was some drunkenness and some plundering of private houses, but Murray stopped the one by staving the rum-barrels of the sutlers, and the other by hanging the chief offender. Within three days order, subordination, hope, and almost confidence were completely restored. Not a man was idle. The troops left their barracks and lay in tents close to their respective alarm posts. On the open space by St. Louis Gate a crowd of convalescents were busy in filling sand-bags to strengthen the defences, while the sick and wounded in the hospitals made wadding for the cannon. The ramparts were faced with fascines, of which a large stock had been provided in the autumn; chevaux-de-frise were planted in exposed places; an outwork was built to protect St. Louis Gate; embrasures were cut along the whole length of the walls; and the French cannon captured when the town was taken were planted against their late owners. Every man was tasked to the utmost of his strength; and the garrison, gaunt, worn, besmirched with mud, looked less like soldiers than like overworked laborers.

The conduct of the officers troubled the spirit of Sergeant Johnson. It shocked his sense of the fitness of things to see them sharing the hard work of the private men, and he thus gives utterance to his feelings. "None but those who were present on the spot can imagine the grief of heart the soldiers felt to see their officers yoked in the harness, dragging up cannon from the Lower Town; to see gentlemen, who were set over them by His Majesty to command and keep them to their duty, working at the batteries with the barrow, pickaxe, and spade." The effect, however, was admirable. The spirit of the men rose to the crisis. Murray, no less than his officers, had all their confidence; for if he had fallen into a fatal error, he atoned for it now by unconquerable resolution and exhaustless fertility of resource. Deserters said that Lévis would assault the town; and the soldiers replied: "Let him come on; he will catch a Tartar."

Lévis and his army were no less busy in digging trenches along the stony back of the Buttes-à-Neveu. Every day the English fire grew hotter; till at last nearly a hundred and fifty cannon vomited iron upon them from the walls of Quebec, and May was well advanced before they could plant a single gun to reply. Their vessels had landed artillery at the Anse du Foulon; but their best hope lay in the succors they daily expected from the river below. In the autumn Lévis, with a view to his intended enterprise, had sent a request to Versailles that a ship laden with munitions and heavy siege-guns should be sent from France in time to meet him at Quebec in April; while he looked also for another ship, which had wintered at Gaspé, and which therefore might reach him as soon as navigation opened. The arrival of these vessels would have made the position of the English doubly critical; and, on the other hand, should an English squadron appear first, Lévis would be forced to raise the siege. Thus each side watched the river with an anxiety that grew constantly more intense; and the English presently descried signals along the shore which seemed to say that French ships were moving up the St. Lawrence. Meantime, while doing their best to compass each other's destruction, neither side forgot the courtesies of war. Lévis heard that Murray liked spruce-beer for his table, and sent him a flag of truce with a quantity of spruce-boughs and a message of compliment; Murray responded with a Cheshire cheese, and Lévis rejoined with a present of partridges.

Bad and scanty fare, excessive toil, and broken sleep were telling ominously on the strength of the garrison when, on the ninth of May, Murray, as he sat pondering over the fire at his quarters in St. Louis Street, was interrupted by an officer who came to tell him that there was a ship-of-war in the Basin beating up towards the town. Murray started from his revery, and directed that British colors should be raised immediately on Cape Diamond.¹ The halyards being out of order, a sailor climbed the staff and drew up the flag to its place. The news had spread; men and officers, divided between hope and fear, crowded to the rampart by the Château, where Durham Terrace now overlooks the St. Lawrence, and every eye was strained on the approaching ship, eager to see whether she would show the red flag of England or the white one of France. Slowly her colors rose to the masthead and unfurled to the wind the red cross of St. George. It was the British frigate "Lowestoffe." She anchored before the Lower Town, and saluted the garrison with twenty-one guns. "The gladness of the troops," says Knox, "is not to be expressed. Both officers and soldiers mounted the parapet in the face of the enemy and huzzaed with their hats in the air for almost an hour. The garrison, the enemy's camp, the bay, and circumjacent country resounded with our shouts and the thunder of our artillery; for the gunners were so elated that they did nothing but load and fire for a considerable time. In short, the general satisfaction is not to be conceived, except by a person who had suffered the extremities of a siege, and been destined, with his brave friends and countrymen, to the scalping-knives of a faithless conqueror and his barbarous allies." The "Lowestoffe" brought news that a British squadron was at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, and would reach Quebec in a few days.

¹ Thompson in Revue Canadienne, iv. 866.

Lévis, in ignorance of this, still clung to the hope that French ships would arrive strong enough to overpower the unwelcome stranger. His guns, being at last in position, presently opened fire upon a wall that was not built to bear the brunt of heavy shot; but an artillery better and more numerous than his own almost silenced them, and his gunners were harassed by repeated sallies. The besiegers had now no real chance of success unless they could carry the place by storm, to which end they had provided abundant scaling-ladders as well as petards to burst in the gates. They made, however, no attempt to use them. A week passed, when, on the evening of the fifteenth, the ship of the line "Vanguard" and the frigate "Diana" sailed into the harbor; and on the next morning the "Diana" and the "Lowestoffe" passed the town to attack the French vessels in the river above. These were six in all, — two frigates, two smaller armed ships, and two schooners; the whole under command of the gallant Vauquelin. He did not belie his reputation; fought his ship with persistent bravery till his ammunition was spent, refused even then to strike his flag, and being made prisoner, was treated by his captors with distinguished honor. The other vessels made little or no resistance. One of them threw her guns overboard and escaped; the rest ran ashore and were burned.

The destruction of his vessels was a death-blow to the hopes of Lévis, for they contained his stores of food and ammunition. He had passed the preceding night in great agitation; and when the cannonade on the river ceased, he hastened to raise the siege. In the evening deserters from his camp told Murray that the French were in full retreat; on which all the English batteries opened, firing at random through the darkness, and sending cannon-balls en ricochet, bowling by scores together, over the Plains of Abraham on the heels of the retiring enemy. Murray marched out at dawn of day to fall upon their rear; but, with a hundred and fifty cannon bellowing behind them, they had made such speed that, though he pushed over the marsh to Old Lorette, he could not overtake them; they had already crossed the river of Cap-Rouge. Why, with numbers still superior, they went off in such haste, it is hard to say. They left behind them thirty-four cannon and six mortars, with petards, scaling-ladders, tents, ammunition, baggage, intrenching tools, many of their muskets, and all their sick and wounded.

The effort to recover Quebec did great honor to the enterprise of the French; but it availed them nothing, served only to waste resources that seemed already at the lowest ebb, and gave fresh opportunity of plunder to Cadet and his crew, who failed not to make use of it.

After the battle of Ste.-Foy Murray sent the frigate "Racehorse" to Halifax with news of his defeat, and from Halifax it was sent to England. The British public were taken by surprise. "Who the deuce was thinking of Quebec?" says Horace Walpole. "America was like a book one has read and done with; but here we are on a sudden reading our book backwards." Ten days passed, and then came word that the siege was raised and that the French were gone; upon which Walpole wrote to General Conway: "Well, Quebec is come to life again. Last night I went to see the Holdernesses. I met my Lady in a triumphal car, drawn by a Manx horse, thirteen little fingers high, with Lady Emily. Mr. Milbank was walking by himself in ovation after the car, and they were going to see the bonfire at the alehouse at the corner. The whole procession returned with me; and from the Countess's dressing-room we saw a battery fired before the house, the mob crying, 'God bless the good news!' These are all the particulars I know of the siege. My Lord would have showed me the journal; but we amused ourselves much better in going to eat peaches from the new Dutch stoves [hot-houses]."

NOTE.—On the battle of Ste-Foy and the subsequent siege, Lévis, Guerre du Canada. Relation de la seconde Bataille de Québec et du Siège de cette Ville (there are several copies of this paper, with different titles and some variation) Murray to Amherst, 30 April, 1760 Murray, Journal kept at Quebec from September 18, 1759, to May 17, 1760 (Public Record Office, America and West Indies, xcix.). Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760. Letter from an Officer of the Royal Americans at Quebec, 24 May, 1760 (in London Magazine and several periodical papers of the time) Fraser, Journal (Quebec Hist. Soc.). Johnstone, Campaign of 1760 (Ibid.). Relation de ce qui s'est passé au Siège de Quebec, par une Religieuse de l'Hôpital Général (Ibid.) Mémoires of the Siege of Quebec, by Sergeant John Johnson Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760 Letters of Lévis, Bourlamaque, and Vaudreuil, May, June, 1760 Several letters from officers at Quebec in provincial newspapers Knox, II 292-322 Plan of the Battle and Situation of the British and French on the Heights of Abraham, the 28th of April, 1760,—an admirable plan, attached to the great plan of operations at Quebec before mentioned, and necessary to an understanding of the position and movements of the two armies (British Museum, King's Maps)

The narratives of Mante, Entick, Wynne, Smith, and other secondary writers give no additional light. On the force engaged on each side, see Appendix K

CHAPTER XXX.

1760.

FALL OF CANADA.

DESPERATE SITUATION. — EFFORTS OF VAUDREUIL AND LÉVIS — PLANS OF AMHERST — A TRIPLE ATTACK. — ADVANCE OF MURRAY. — ADVANCE OF HAVILAND — ADVANCE OF AMHERST. — CAPITULATION OF MONTREAL — PROTEST OF LÉVIS — INJUSTICE OF LOUIS XV. — JOY IN THE BRITISH COLONIES. — CHARACTER OF THE WAR.

THE retreat of Lévis left Canada little hope but in a speedy peace. This hope was strong, for a belief widely prevailed that, even if the colony should be subdued, it would be restored to France by treaty. Its available force did not exceed eight or ten thousand men, as most of the Canadians below the district of Three Rivers had sworn allegiance to King George; and though many of them had disregarded the oath to join the standard of Lévis, they could venture to do so no longer. The French had lost the best of their artillery, their gunpowder was falling short, their provisions would barely carry them to harvest time, and no more was to be hoped for, since a convoy of ships which had sailed from France at the end of winter, laden with supplies of all kinds, had been captured by the English. The blockade of the St. Lawrence was complete. The Western Indians would not fight, and even those of the mission villages were wavering and insolent.

Yet Vaudreuil and Lévis exerted themselves for defence with an energy that does honor to them both. "Far from showing the least timidity," says the ever-modest governor, "I have taken positions such as may hide our weakness from the enemy."¹ He stationed Rochbeaucourt with three hundred men at Pointe-aux-Trembles; Repentigny with two hundred at Jacques-Cartier; and Dumas with twelve hundred at Deschambault to watch the St. Lawrence and, if possible, prevent Murray from moving up the river. Bougainville was stationed at Isle-aux-Noix to bar the approach from Lake Champlain, and a force under La Corne was held ready to defend the rapids above Montreal, should the English attempt that dangerous passage. Prisoners taken by war-parties near Crown Point gave exaggerated reports of hostile preparation, and doubled and trebled the forces that were mustering against Canada.

These forces were nevertheless considerable. Amherst had resolved to enter the colony by all its three gates at once, and, advancing from east, west, and south, unite at Montreal and crush it as in the jaws of a vice. Murray was to ascend the St. Lawrence from Quebec, while Brigadier Haviland forced an entrance by way of Lake Champlain, and Amherst himself led the main army down the St.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 22 Juin, 1760.

Lawrence from Lake Ontario. This last route was long, circuitous, difficult, and full of danger from the rapids that obstructed the river. His choice of it for his chief line of operation, instead of the shorter and easier way of Lake Champlain, was meant, no doubt, to prevent the French army from escaping up the Lakes to Detroit and the other wilderness posts, where it might have protracted the war for an indefinite time; while the plan adopted, if successful, would make its capture certain. The plan was a critical one. Three armies advancing from three different points, hundreds of miles apart, by routes full of difficulty, and with no possibility of intercommunication, were to meet at the same place at the same time, or, failing to do so, run the risk of being destroyed in detail. If the French troops could be kept together, and if the small army of Murray or of Haviland should reach Montreal a few days before the co-operating forces appeared, it might be separately attacked and overpowered. In this lay the hope of Vaudreuil and Lévis.¹

After the siege of Quebec was raised, Murray had an effective force of about twenty-five hundred rank and file.² As the spring opened the invalids were encamped on the Island of Orleans, where fresh air, fresh provisions, and the change from the pestiferous town hospitals wrought such wonders on the scorbutic patients that in a few weeks a considerable number of them were again fit for garrison duty, if not for the field. Thus it happened that on the second of July twenty-four hundred and fifty men and officers received orders to embark for Montreal; and on the fifteenth they set sail, in thirty-two vessels, with a number of boats and bateaux.¹ They were followed some time after by Lord Rollo, with thirteen hundred additional men just arrived from Louisbourg, the King having ordered that fortress to be abandoned and dismantled. They advanced slowly, landing from time to time, skirmishing with detachments of the enemy who followed them along the shore, or more frequently trading with the farmers who brought them vegetables, poultry, eggs, and fresh meat. They passed the fortified hill of Jacques-Cartier, whence they were saluted with shot and shell, stopped at various parishes, disarmed the inhabitants, administered oaths of neutrality, which were taken without much apparent reluctance, and on the fourth of August came within sight of Three Rivers, then occupied by a body of troops expecting an attack. "But," says Knox, "a delay here would be absurd, as that wretched place must share the fate of Montreal. Our fleet sailed this morning. The French troops, apparently about two thousand, lined their different works, and were in general clothed as regulars, except a very few Canadians and about fifty naked Picts or savages, their bodies being painted of a reddish color and their faces of different colors, which I plainly discerned with my glass. Their light cavalry, who paraded along shore, seemed to be well appointed, clothed in blue, faced with scarlet; but their officers had white uniforms. In fine, their troops, batteries, fair-looking houses; their situation on the banks of a delightful river; our fleet sailing triumphantly before them, with our floating batteries drawn up in line of battle; the country on both sides interspersed with neat settlements, together with the verdure of the fields and trees and the clear, pleasant weather, afforded as agreeable a prospect as the most lively imagination can conceive."

¹ Lévis à Bourlamaque, Juillet, Août, 1760.

² Return of the Present State of His Majesty's Forces in Garrison at Quebec, 21 May, 1760.

¹ Knox, II 344, 348

This excellent lover of the picturesque was still more delighted as the fleet sailed among the islands of St. Peter. "I think nothing could equal the beauties of our navigation this morning: the meandering course of the narrow channel; the awfulness and solemnity of the dark forests with which these islands are covered; the fragrancy of the spontaneous fruits, shrubs, and flowers; the verdure of the water by the reflection of the neighboring woods; the wild chirping notes of the feathered inhabitants; the masts and sails of ships appearing as if among the trees, both ahead and astern: formed altogether an enchanting diversity."

The evening recalled him from dreams to realities; for towards seven o'clock they reached the village of Sorel, where they found a large body of troops and militia intrenched along the strand. Bourlamaque was in command here with two or three thousand men, and Dumas, with another body, was on the northern shore. Both had orders to keep abreast of the fleet as it advanced; and thus French and English alike drew slowly towards Montreal, where lay the main French force under Lévis, ready to unite with Bouilmaque and Dumas, and fall upon Murray at the first opportunity. Montreal was now but a few leagues distant, and the situation was becoming delicate. Murray sent five rangers towards Lake Champlain to get news of Haviland, and took measures at the same time to cause the desertion of the Canadians, who formed the largest part of the opposing force. He sent a proclamation among the parishes, advising the inhabitants to remain peacefully at home, promising that those who did so should be safe in person and property, and threatening to burn every house from which the men of the family were absent. These were not idle words. A detachment sent for the purpose destroyed a settlement near Sorel, the owners of which were in arms under Bouilmaque. "I was under the cruel necessity of burning the greatest part of these poor unhappy people's houses," wrote Murray. "I pray God this example may suffice, for my nature revolts when this becomes a necessary part of my duty."¹ On the other hand, he treated with great kindness all who left the army and returned to their families. The effect was soon felt. The Canadians came in by scores and by hundreds to give up their arms and take the oath of neutrality, till, before the end of August, half Bourlamaque's force had disappeared. Murray encamped on Isle St.-Thérèse, just below Montreal, and watched and waited for Haviland and Amherst to appear.¹

¹ Murray to Pitt, 24 August, 1760.

Vaudreuil on his part was not idle. He sent a counter-proclamation through the parishes as an antidote to that of Murray. "I have been compelled," he writes to the minister, "to decree the pain of death to the Canadians who are so dastardly as to desert or give up their arms to the enemy, and to order that the houses of those who do not join our army shall be burned."² Execution was to be summary, without court-martial.³ Yet desertion increased daily. The Canadians felt themselves doubly ruined, for it became known that the court had refused to redeem the paper that formed the whole currency of the colony; and, in their desperation, they preferred to trust the tried clemency of the enemy rather than exasperate him by persisting in a vain defence. Vaudreuil writes in his usual strain: "I am taking the most just measures to unite our forces, and, if our situation permits, fight a battle, or several battles. It is to be feared that we shall go down before an enemy so numerous and strong; but, whatever may be the event, we will save the honor of the King's arms. I have the honor to repeat to you, Monseigneur, that if any resource were left me, whatever the progress the English might make, I would maintain myself in some part of the colony with my remaining troops, after having fought with the greatest obstinacy; but I am absolutely without the least remnant of the necessary means. In these unhappy circumstances I shall continue to use every manœuvre and device to keep the enemy in check; but if we succumb in the battles we shall fight, I shall apply myself to obtaining a capitulation which may avert the total ruin of a people who will remain forever French, and who could not survive their misfortunes but for the hope of being restored by the treaty of peace to the rule of His Most Christian Majesty. It is with this view that I shall remain in this town, the Chevalier de Lévis having represented to me that it would be an evil to the colonists past remedy if any accident should happen to me." Lévis was willing to go very far in soothing the susceptibilities of the governor; but it may be suspected this time that he thought him more useful within four walls than in the open field.

¹ Knox, ii. 382, 384. Mante, 340

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760.

³ Lévis à Bourlamaque, 25 Août, 1760.

There seemed good hope of stopping the advance of Haviland. To this end Vaudreuil had stationed Bougainville at Isle-aux-Noix with seventeen hundred men, and Roquemaure at St. John, a few miles distant, with twelve or fifteen hundred more, besides all the Indians.¹ Haviland embarked at Crown Point with thirty-four hundred regulars, provincials, and Indians.¹ Four days brought him to Isle-aux-Noix; he landed, planted cannon in the swamp, and opened fire. Major Darby with the light infantry, and Rogers with the rangers, dragged three light pieces through the forest, and planted them on the river-bank in the rear of Bougainville's position, where lay the French naval force, consisting of three armed vessels and several gunboats. The cannon were turned upon the principal ship; a shot cut her cable, and a strong west wind drove her ashore into the hands of her enemies. The other vessels and gunboats made all sail for St. John, but stranded in a bend of the river, where the rangers, swimming out with their tomahawks, boarded and took one of them, and the rest soon surrendered. It was a fatal blow to Bougainville, whose communications with St. John were now cut off. In accordance with instructions from Vaudreuil, he abandoned the island on the night of the twenty-seventh of August, and, making his way with infinite difficulty through the dark forest, joined Roquemaure at St. John, twelve miles below. Haviland followed, the rangers leading the way. Bougainville and Roquemaure fell back, abandoned St. John and Chambly, and joined Bourlamaque on the banks of the St. Lawrence, where the united force at first outnumbered that of Haviland, though fast melted away by discouragement and desertion. Haviland opened communication with Murray, and they both looked daily for the arrival of Amherst, whose approach was rumored by prisoners and deserters.¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760.

¹ A Last of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada, 1760. Compare Mante, 340, Knox, ii 392, and Rogers, 188 Chevalier Johnstone, who was with Bougainville, says "about four thousand," which Vaudreuil multiplies to twelve thousand

The army of Amherst had gathered at Oswego in July. On the tenth of August it was all afloat on Lake Ontario, to the number of ten thousand one hundred and forty-two men, besides about seven hundred Indians under Sir William Johnson.² Before the fifteenth the whole had reached La Présentation, otherwise called Oswegatchie or La Galette, the seat of Father Piquet's mission. Near by was a French armed brig, the "Ottawa," with ten cannon and a hundred men, threatening destruction to Amherst's bateaux and whaleboats. Five gunboats attacked and captured her. Then the army advanced again, and were presently joined by two armed vessels of their own which had lingered behind, bewildered among the channels of the Thousand Islands.

Near the head of the rapids, a little below La Galette, stood Fort Lévis, built the year before on an islet in mid-channel. Amherst might have passed its batteries with slight loss, continuing his voyage without paying it the honor of a siege; and this was what the French commanders feared that he would do. "We shall be fortunate," Lévis wrote to

¹ Rogers, Journals Diary of a Sergeant in the Army of Haviland. Johnstone, Campaign of 1760 Bigot au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760

² A List of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada. Compare Mante, 301, and Knox, II 408.

Bourlamaque, "if the enemy amuse themselves with capturing it. My chief anxiety is lest Amherst should reach Montreal so soon that we may not have time to unite our forces to attack Haviland or Murray." If he had better known the English commander, Lévis would have seen that he was not the man to leave a post of the enemy in his rear under any circumstances; and Amherst had also another reason for wishing to get the garrison into his hands, for he expected to find among them the pilots whom he needed to guide his boats down the rapids. He therefore invested the fort, and, on the twenty-third, cannonaded it from his vessels, the mainland, and the neighboring islands. It was commanded by Pouchot, the late commandant of Niagara, made prisoner in the last campaign, and since exchanged. As the rocky islet had but little earth, the defences, though thick and strong, were chiefly of logs, which flew in splinters under the bombardment. The French, however, made a brave resistance. The firing lasted all day, was resumed in the morning, and continued two days more; when Pouchot, whose works were in ruins, surrendered himself and his garrison. On this, Johnson's Indians prepared to kill the prisoners; and, being compelled to desist, three fourths of them went home in a rage.¹

Now began the critical part of the expedition, the descent of the rapids. The Galops, the Rapide Plat, the Long Saut, the Côteau du Lac, were passed in succession, with little loss, till they reached the Cedars, the Buisson, and the Cascades, where the reckless surges dashed and bounded in the sun, beautiful and terrible as young tigers at play. Boat after boat, borne on their foaming crests, rushed madly down the torrent. Forty-six were totally wrecked, eighteen were damaged, and eighty-four men were drowned.¹ La Corne was watching the rapids with a considerable body of Canadians; and it is difficult to see why this bold and enterprising chief allowed the army to descend undisturbed through passes so dangerous. At length the last rapid was left behind; and the flotilla, gliding in peace over the smooth breast of Lake St. Louis, landed at Isle Perrot, a few leagues from Montreal. In the morning, September sixth, the troops embarked again, landed unopposed at La Chine, nine miles from the city, marched on without delay, and encamped before its walls. .

¹ On the capture of Fort Lévis, Amherst to Pitt, 26 August, 1760 Amherst to Monckton, same date Pouchot, II. 204-282. Knox, II 405-413. Mante, 303-306 All Canada in the Hands of the English (Boston, 1760). Journal of Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull.

The Montreal of that time was a long, narrow assemblage of wooden or stone houses, one or two stories high, above which rose the peaked towers of the Seminary, the spires of three churches, the walls of four convents, with the trees of their adjacent gardens, and, conspicuous at the lower end, a high mound of earth, crowned by a redoubt, where a few cannon were mounted. The whole was surrounded by a shallow moat and a bastioned stone wall, made for defence against Indians, and incapable of resisting cannon.¹

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 8 September, 1760.

On the morning after Amherst encamped above the place, Murray landed to encamp below it; and Vaudreuil, looking across the St. Lawrence, could see the tents of Haviland's little army on the southern shore. Bourlamaque, Bougainville, and Roquemaure, abandoned by all their militia, had crossed to Montreal with the few regulars that remained with them. The town was crowded with non-combatant refugees. Here, too, was nearly all the remaining force of Canada, consisting of twenty-two hundred troops of the line and some two hundred colony troops; for all the Canadians had by this time gone home. Many of the regulars, especially of the colony troops, had also deserted, and the rest were so broken in discipline that their officers were forced to use entreaties instead of commands. The three armies encamped around the city amounted to seventeen thousand men;² Amherst was bringing up his cannon from ¹ An East View of Montreal, drawn on the Spot by Thomas Patten (King's Maps, British Museum), Plan of Montreal, 1760 A Description of Montreal, in several magazines of the time. The recent Canadian publication called Le Vieux Montréal, is exceedingly incorrect as to the numbers of the British troops and the position of their camps.

² A List of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada. See Smith, History of Canada, 1. Appendix XIX. Vaudreuil writes to Charles Langlade, on the ninth, that the three armies amount to twenty thousand, and raises the number to thirty-two thousand in a letter to the minister on the next day. Berniers says twenty thou-

La Chine, and the town wall would have crumbled before them in an hour.

On the night when Amherst arrived, the governor called a council of war.¹ It was resolved that since all the militia and many of the regulars had abandoned the army, and the Indian allies of France had gone over to the enemy, further resistance was impossible. Vaudreuil laid before the assembled officers a long paper that he had drawn up, containing fifty-five articles of capitulation to be proposed to the English; and these were unanimously approved.² In the morning Bougainville carried them to the tent of Amherst. He granted the greater part, modified some, and flatly refused others. That which the French officers thought more important than all the rest was the provision that the troops should march out with arms, cannon, and the honors of war; to which it was replied: "The whole garrison of Montreal and all other French troops in Canada must lay down their arms, and shall not serve during the present war" This demand was felt to be intolerable. The governor sent Bougainville back to remonstrate; but Amherst was inflexible. Then Lévis tried to shake his resolution, and sent him an officer with the following note: "I send your Excellency M. de la Pause, Assistant Quartermaster-sand, Lévis, for obvious reasons, exaggerates the number to forty thousand

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 10 Septembre, 1760

² Procès-verbal de la Délibération du Conseil de Guerre tenu à Montréal, 6 Septembre, 1760.

General of the Army, on the subject of the too rigorous article which you dictate to the troops by the capitulation, to which it would not be possible for us to subscribe." Amherst answered the envoy: "I am fully resolved, for the infamous part the troops of France have acted in exciting the savages to perpetrate the most horrid and unheard of barbarities in the whole progress of the war, and for other open treacheries and flagrant breaches of faith, to manifest to all the world by this capitulation my detestation of such practices;" and he dismissed La Pause with a short note, refusing to change the conditions.

On the next morning, September eighth, Vaudreuil yielded, and signed the capitulation. By it Canada and all its dependencies passed to the British Crown. French officers, civil and military, with French troops and sailors, were to be sent to France in British ships. Free exercise of religion was assured to the people of the colony, and the religious communities were to retain their possessions, rights, and privileges. All persons who might wish to retire to France were allowed to do so, and the Canadians were to remain in full enjoyment of feudal and other property, including negro and Indian slaves.¹

The greatest alarm had prevailed among the inhabitants lest they should suffer violence from the English Indians, and Vaudreuil had endeavored to provide that these dangerous enemies should be sent back at once to their villages. This was refused, with the remark: "There never have been any cruelties committed by the Indians of our army." Strict precautions were taken at the same time, not only against the few savages whom the firm conduct of Johnson at Fort Lévis had not driven away, but also against the late allies of the French, now become a peril to them. In consequence, not a man, woman, or child was hurt. Amherst, in general orders, expressed his confidence "that the troops will not disgrace themselves by the least appearance of inhumanity, or by any unsoldierlike behavior in seeking for plunder; and that as the Canadians are now become British subjects, they will feel the good effects of His Majesty's protection." They were in fact treated with a kindness that seemed to surprise them.

¹ Articles of Capitulation, 8 September, 1760. Amherst to Pitt, same date.

Lévis was so incensed at the demand that the troops should lay down their arms and serve no longer during the war that, before the capitulation was signed, he made a formal protest¹ in his own name and that of the officers from France, and insisted that the negotiation should be broken off. "If," he added, "the Marquis de Vaudreuil, through political motives, thinks himself obliged to surrender the colony at once, we ask his permission to withdraw with the troops of the line to the Island of St. Helen, in order to uphold there, on our own behalf, the honor of the King's arms." The proposal was of course rejected, as Lévis knew that it would be, and he and his officers were ordered to conform to the capitulation. When Vaudreuil reached France, three months after, he had the mortification to receive from the colonial minister a letter containing these words: "Though His Majesty was perfectly aware of the state of Canada, nevertheless, after the assurances you had given to make the utmost efforts to sustain the honor of his arms, he did not expect to hear so soon of the surrender of Montreal and the whole colony. But, granting that capitulation was a necessity, his Majesty was not the less surprised and ill pleased at the conditions, so little honorable, to which you submitted, especially after the representations made you by the Chevalier de Lévis."¹ The brother of Vaudreuil complained to the minister of the terms of this letter, and the minister replied: "I see with regret, Monsieur, that you are pained by the letter I wrote your brother; but I could not help telling him what the King did me the honor to say to me; and it would have been unpleasant for him to hear it from anybody else."²

¹ Protêt de M de Lévis à M de Vaudreuil contre la Clause dans les Articles de Capitulation qui exige que les Troupes mettront bas les Armes, avec l'Ordre de M de Vaudreuil au Chevalier de Lévis de se conformer à la Capitulation proposée Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 10 Septembre, 1780. Lévis au Ministre de la Guerre, 27 Novembre, 1780.

It is true that Vaudreuil had in some measure drawn this reproach upon himself by his boastings about the battles he would fight; yet the royal displeasure was undeserved. The governor had no choice but to give up the colony; for Amherst had him in his power, and knew that he could exact what terms he pleased. Further resistance could only have ended in surrender at the discretion of the victor, and the protest of Lévis was nothing but a device to save his own reputation and that of his brother officers from France. Vaudreuil had served the King and the colony in some respects with ability, always with an unflagging zeal; and he loved the land of his birth with a jealous devotion that goes far towards redeeming his miserable defects. The King himself, and not the servants whom he abandoned to their fate, was answerable for the loss of New France.

¹ Le Ministre à Vaudreuil, 5 Décembre, 1760

² Le Ministre au Vicomte de Vaudreuil, Frère du Gouverneur, 21 Décembre, 1760

Half the continent had changed hands at the scratch of a pen. Governor Bernard, of Massachusetts, proclaimed a day of thanksgiving for the great event, and the Boston newspapers recount how the occasion was celebrated with a parade of the cadets and other volunteer corps, a grand dinner in Faneuil Hall, music, bonfires, illuminations, firing of cannon, and, above all, by sermons in every church of the province; for the heart of early New England always found voice through her pulpits. Before me lies a bundle of these sermons, rescued from sixscore years of dust, scrawled on their titlepages with names of owners dead long ago, worm-eaten, dingy, stained with the damps of time, and uttering in quaint old letterpress the emotions of a buried and forgotten past. Triumph, gratulation, hope, breathe in every line, but no ill-will against a fallen enemy. Thomas Foxcroft, pastor of the "Old Church in Boston," preaches from the text, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." "Long," he says, "had it been the common opinion, Delenda est Carthago, Canada must be conquered, or we could hope for no lasting quiet in these parts; and now, through the good hand of our God upon us, we see the happy day of its accomplishment. We behold His Majesty's victorious troops treading upon the high places of the enemy, their last fortress delivered up, and their whole country surrendered to the King of Britain in the person of his general, the intrepid, the serene, the successful Amherst."

The loyal John Mellen, pastor of the Second Church in Lancaster, exclaims, boding nothing of the tempest to come: "Let us fear God and honor the King, and be peaceable subjects of an easy and happy government. And may the blessing of Heaven be ever upon those enemies of our country that have now submitted to the English Crown, and according to the oath they have taken lead quiet lives in all godliness and honesty." Then he ventures to predict that America, now thrown open to British colonists, will be peopled in a century and a half with sixty million souls: a prophecy likely to be more than fulfilled.

"God has given us to sing this day the downfall of New France, the North American Babylon, New England's rival," cries Eli Forbes to his congregation of sober farmers and staid matrons at the rustic village of Brookfield Like many of his flock, he had been to the war, having served two years as chaplain of Ruggles's Massachusetts regiment; and something of a martial spirit breathes through his discourse. He passes in review the events of each campaign down to their triumphant close. "Thus God was our salvation and our strength; yet he who directs the great events of war suffered not our joy to be uninterrupted, for we had to lament the fall of the valiant and good General Wolfe, whose death demands a tear from every British eye, a sigh from every Protestant heart. Is he dead? I recall myself. Such heroes are immortal; he lives on every loyal tongue; he lives in every grateful breast; and charity bids me give him a place among the princes of heaven." Nor does he forget the praises of Amherst, "the renowned general, worthy of that most honorable of all titles, the Christian hero; for he loves his enemies, and while he subdues them he makes them happy. He transplants British liberty to where till now it was unknown. He acts the General, the Briton, the Conqueror, and the Christian. What fair hopes arise from the peaceful and undisturbed enjoyment of this good land, and the blessing of our gracious God with it! Methinks I see towns enlarged, settlements increased, and this howling wilderness become a fruitful field which the Lord hath blessed; and, to complete the scene, I see churches rise and flourish in every Christian grace where has been the seat of Satan and Indian idolatry."

Nathaniel Appleton, of Cambridge, hails the dawning of a new era. "Who can tell what great and glorious things God is about to bring forward in the world, and in this world of America in particular? Oh, may the time come when these deserts, which for ages unknown have been regions of darkness and habitations of cruelty, shall be illuminated with the light of the glorious Gospel, and when this part of the world, which till the later ages was utterly unknown, shall be the glory and joy of the whole earth!"

On the American continent the war was ended, and the British colonists breathed for a space, as they drifted unwittingly towards a deadlier strife. They had learned hard and useful lessons. Their mutual jealousies and disputes, the quarrels of their governors and assemblies, the want of any general military organization, and the absence, in most of them, of military habits, joined to narrow views of their own interest, had unfitted them to the last degree for carrying on offensive war. Nor were the British troops sent for their support remarkable in the beginning for good discipline or efficient command. When hostilities broke out, the army of Great Britain was so small as to be hardly worth the name. A new one had to be created; and thus the inexperienced Shirley and the incompetent Loudon, with the futile Newcastle behind them, had, besides their own incapacity, the disadvantage of raw troops and half-formed officers; while against them stood an enemy who, though weak in numbers, was strong in a centralized military organization, skilful leaders armed with untrammelled and absolute authority, practised soldiers, and a population not only brave, but in good part inured to war.

The nature of the country was another cause that helped to protract the contest. "Geography," says Von Moltke, "is three-fourths of military science;" and never was the truth of his words more fully exemplified. Canada was fortified with vast out-works of defence in the savage forests, marshes, and mountains that encompassed her, where the thoroughfares were streams choked with fallen trees and obstructed by cataracts. Never was the problem of moving troops, encumbered with baggage and artillery, a more difficult one. The question was less how to fight the enemy than how to get at him. If a few practicable roads had crossed this broad tract of wilderness, the war would have been shortened and its character changed.

From these and other reasons, the numerical superiority of the English was to some extent made unavailing. This superiority, though exaggerated by French writers, was nevertheless immense if estimated by the number of men called to arms; but only a part of these could be employed in offensive operations. The rest garrisoned forts and block-houses and guarded the far reach of frontier from Nova Scotia to South Carolina, where a wily enemy, silent and secret as fate, choosing their own time and place of attack, and striking unawares at every unguarded spot, compelled thousands of men, scattered at countless points of defence, to keep unceasing watch against a few hundred savage marauders. Full half the levies of the colonies, and many of the regulars, were used in service of this kind.

In actual encounters the advantage of numbers was often with the French, through the comparative ease with which they could concentrate their forces at a given point. Of the ten considerable sieges or battles of the war, five, besides the great bush-fight in which the Indians defeated Braddock, were victories for France; and in four of these — Oswego, Fort William Henry, Montmorenci, and Ste.-Foy — the odds were greatly on her side.

Yet in this the most picturesque and dramatic of American wars, there is nothing more noteworthy than the skill with which the French and Canadian leaders used their advantages; the indomitable spirit with which, slighted and abandoned as they were, they grappled with prodigious difficulties, and the courage with which they were seconded by regulars and militia alike. In spite of occasional lapses, the defence of Canada deserves a tribute of admiration.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1758-1763.

THE PEACE OF PARIS

EXODUS OF CANADIAN LEADERS — WRECK OF THE "AUGUSTE" — TRIAL OF BIGOT AND HIS CONFEDERATES. — FRIDERIC OF PRUSSIA HIS TRIUMPHS; HIS REVERSES; HIS PERIL, HIS FORTITUDE. — DEATH OF GEORGE II — CHANGE OF POLICY. — CHOISEUL, HIS OVERTURES OF PEACE — THE FAMILY COMPACT — FALL OF PITT — DEATH OF THE CZARINA. — FREDERIC SAVED — WAR WITH SPAIN — CAPTURE OF HAVANA — NEGOTIATIONS — TERMS OF PEACE — SHALL CANADA BE RESTORED? — SPEECH OF PITT — THE TREATY SIGNED — END OF THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR

IN accordance with the terms of the capitulation of Montreal, the French military officers, with such of the soldiers as could be kept together, as well as all the chief civil officers of the colony, sailed for France in vessels provided by the conquerors. They were voluntarily followed by the principal members of the Canadian noblesse, and by many of the merchants who had no mind to swear allegiance to King George. The peasants and poorer colonists remained at home to begin a new life under a new flag.

Though this exodus of the natural leaders of Canada was in good part deferred till the next year, and though the number of persons to be immediately embarked was reduced by the desertion of many French soldiers who had married Canadian wives, yet the English authorities were sorely perplexed to find vessels enough for the motley crowd of passengers. When at last they were all on their way, a succession of furious autumnal storms fell upon them. The ship that carried Lévis barely escaped wreck, and that which bore Vaudreuil and his wife fared little better.¹ Worst of all was the fate of the "Auguste," on board of which was the bold but ruthless partisan, Saint-Luc de la Corne, his brother, his children, and a party of Canadian officers, together with ladies, merchants, and soldiers. A worthy ecclesiastical chronicler paints the unhappy vessel as a floating Babylon, and sees in her fate the stern judgment of Heaven.² It is true that New France ran riot in the last years of her existence; but before the "Auguste" was well out of the St. Lawrence she was so tossed and buffeted, so lashed with waves and pelted with rain, that the most alluring forms of sin must have lost their charm, and her inmates passed days rather of penance than transgression. There was a violent storm as the ship entered the Gulf; then a calm, during which she took fire in the cook's galley. The crew and passengers subdued the flames after desperate efforts; but their only food thenceforth was dry biscuit. Off the coast of Cape Breton another gale rose. They lost their reckoning and lay tossing blindly amid the tempest. The exhausted sailors took, in despair, to their hammocks, from which neither commands nor blows could rouse them, while amid shrieks, tears, prayers, and vows to Heaven, the "Auguste" drove towards the shore, struck, and rolled over on her side. La Corne with six others gained the beach; and towards night they saw the ship break asunder, and counted a hundred and fourteen corpses strewn along the sand. Aided by Indians and by English officers, La Corne made his way on snow-shoes up the St. John, and by a miracle of enduring hardihood reached Quebec before the end of winter.¹

¹ Lévis à Belleisle, 27 Novembre, 1760

² Faillon, Vie de Mademoiselle Le Ber, 363-370.

The other ships weathered the November gales, and landed their passengers on the shores of France, where some of them found a dismal welcome, being seized and thrown into the Bastille. These were Vaudreuil, Bigot, Cadet, Péan, Bréard, Varin, Le Mercier, Penisseault, Maurin, Corpron, and others accused of the frauds and peculations that had helped to ruin Canada. In the next year they were all put on trial, whether as an act of pure justice or as a device to turn public indignation from the government. In December, 1761, judges commissioned for the purpose began their sessions at the Châtelet, and a prodigious mass of evidence was laid before them. Cadet, with brazen effrontery, at first declared himself innocent, but ended with full and unblushing confession. Bigot denied everything till silenced point by point with papers bearing his own signature. The prisoners defended themselves by accusing each other. Bigot and Vaudreuil brought mutual charges, while all agreed in denouncing Cadet. Vaudreuil, as before mentioned, was acquitted. Bigot was banished from France for life, his property was confiscated, and he was condemned to pay fifteen hundred thousand francs by way of restitution. Cadet was banished for nine years from Paris and required to refund six millions; while others were sentenced in sums varying from thirty thousand to eight hundred thousand francs, and were ordered to be held in prison till the money was paid. Of twenty-one persons brought to trial ten were condemned, six were acquitted, three received an admonition, and two were dismissed for want of evidence. Thirty-four failed to appear, of whom seven were sentenced in default, and judgment was reserved in the case of the rest.¹ Even those who escaped from justice profited little by their gains, for unless they had turned them betimes into land or other substantial values, they lost them in a discredited paper currency and dishonored bills of exchange.

¹ Journal du Voyage de M. Saint-Luc de la Corne. This is his own narrative

While on the American continent the last scenes of the war were drawing to their close, the contest raged in Europe with unabated violence. England was in the full career of success; but her great ally, ¹ Jugement rendu souverainement et en dernier Ressort dans l'Affaire du Canada. Papers at the Châtelet of Paris, cited by Dussieux.

Frederic of Prussia, seemed tottering to his ruin. In the summer of 1758 his glory was at its height. French, Austrians, and Russians had all fled before him. But the autumn brought reverses; and the Austrian general, Daun, at the head of an overwhelming force, gained over him a partial victory, which his masterly strategy robbed of its fruits. It was but a momentary respite. His kingdom was exhausted by its own triumphs. His best generals were dead, his best soldiers killed or disabled, his resources almost spent, the very chandeliers of his palace melted into coin; and all Europe was in arms against him. The disciplined valor of the Prussian troops and the supreme leadership of their undespairing King had thus far held the invading hosts at bay; but now the end seemed near. Frederic could not be everywhere at once; and while he stopped one leak the torrent poured in at another. The Russians advanced again, defeated General Wedell, whom he sent against them, and made a junction with the Austrians. In August, 1759, he attacked their united force at Kunersdorf, broke their left wing to pieces, took a hundred and eighty cannon, forced their centre to give ground, and after hours of furious fighting was overwhelmed at last. In vain he tried to stop the rout. The bullets killed two horses under him, tore his clothes, and crushed a gold snuff-box in his waistcoat pocket. "Is there no b— of a shot that can hit me, then?" he cried in his bitterness, as his aides-de-camp forced him from the field. For a few days he despaired; then rallied to his forlorn task, and with smiles on his lip and anguish at his heart watched, manœuvred, and fought with cool and stubborn desperation. To his friend D'Argens he wrote soon after his defeat: "Death is sweet in comparison to such a life as mine. Have pity on me and it; believe that I still keep to myself a great many evil things, not wishing to afflict or disgust anybody with them, and that I would not counsel you to fly these unlucky countries if I had any ray of hope. Adieu, mon cher!" It was well for him and for Prussia that he had strong allies in the dissensions and delays of his enemies. But his cup was not yet full. Dresden was taken from him, eight of his remaining generals and twelve thousand men were defeated and captured at Maxen, and "this infernal campaign," as he calls it, closed in thick darkness.

"I wrap myself in my stoicism as best I can," he writes to Voltaire. "If you saw me you would hardly know me: I am old, broken, gray-headed, wrinkled. If this goes on there will be nothing left of me but the mania of making verses and an inviolable attachment to my duties and to the few virtuous men I know. But you will not get a peace signed by my hand except on conditions honorable to my nation. Your people, blown up with conceit and folly, may depend on this."

The same stubborn conflict with overmastering odds, the same intrepid resolution, the same subtle strategy, the same skill in eluding the blow and lightning-like quickness in retorting it, marked Frederic's campaign of 1760. At Liegnitz three armies, each equal to his own, closed round him, and he put them all to flight. While he was fighting in Silesia, the Allies marched upon Berlin, took it, and held it three days, but withdrew on his approach. For him there was no peace. "Why weary you with the details of my labors and my sorrows?" he wrote again to his faithful D'Argens. "My spirits have forsaken me; all gayety is buried with the loved noble ones to whom my heart was bound." He had lost his mother and his devoted sister Wilhelmina. "You as a follower of Epicurus put a value upon life, as for me, I regard death from the Stoic point of view. I have told you, and I repeat it, never shall my hand sign a humiliating peace. Finish this campaign I will, resolved to dare all, to succeed, or find a glorious end." Then came the victory of Torgau, the last and one of the most desperate of his battles: a success dearly bought, and bringing neither rest nor safety. Once more he wrote to D'Argens: "Adieu, dear Marquis; write to me sometimes. Don't forget a poor devil who curses his fatal existence ten times a day." "I live like a military monk. Endless business, and a little consolation from my books. I don't know if I shall outlive this war, but if I do I am firmly resolved to pass the rest of my life in solitude in the bosom of philosophy and friendship. Your nation, you see, is blinder than you thought

These fools will lose their Canada and Pondicherry to please the Queen of Hungary and the Czarina."

The campaign of 1761 was mainly defensive on the part of Frederic. In the exhaustion of his resources he could see no means of continuing the struggle. "It is only Fortune," says the royal sceptic, "that can extricate me from the situation I am in. I escape out of it by looking at the universe on the great scale like an observer from some distant planet. All then seems to be so infinitely small that I could almost pity my enemies for giving themselves so much trouble about so very little. I read a great deal, I devour my books. But for them I think hypochondria would have had me in Bedlam before now. In fine, dear Marquis, we live in troublous times and desperate situations. I have all the properties of a stage hero; always in danger, always on the point of perishing."¹ And in another mood: "I begin to feel that, as the Italians say, revenge is a pleasure for the gods. My philosophy is worn out by suffering. I am no saint, and I will own that I should die content if only I could first inflict a part of the misery that I endure."

While Frederic was fighting for life and crown, an event took place in England that was to have great influence on the war. Walpole recounts it thus, writing to George Montagu on the twenty-fifth of October, 1760: "My man Harry tells me all the amusing news. He first told me of the late Prince of Wales's death, and to-day of the King's; so I must tell you all I know of departed majesty. He went to bed well last night, rose at six this morning as usual, looked, I suppose, if all his money was in his purse, and called for his chocolate. A little after seven he went into the closet; the German valet-de-chambre heard a noise, listened, heard something like a groan, ran in, and found the hero of Oudenarde and Dettingen on the floor with a gash on his right temple by falling against the corner of a bureau. He tried to speak, could not, and expired. The great ventricle of the heart had burst. What an enviable death!"

¹ The above extracts are as translated by Carlyle in his History of Frederick II. of Prussia

The old King was succeeded by his grandson, George III., a mirror of domestic virtues, conscientious, obstinate, narrow. His accession produced political changes that had been preparing for some time. His grandfather was German at heart, loved his Continental kingdom of Hanover, and was eager for all measures that looked to its defence and preservation. Pitt, too, had of late vigorously supported the Continental war, saying that he would conquer America in Germany. Thus with different views the King and the minister had concurred in the same measures. But George III. was English by birth, language, and inclination. His ruling passion was the establishment and increase of his own authority. He disliked Pitt, the representative of the people. He was at heart averse to a war, the continuance of which would make the Great Commoner necessary, and therefore powerful, and he wished for a peace that would give free scope to his schemes for strengthening the prerogative. He was not alone in his pacific inclinations. The enemies of the haughty minister, who had ridden rough-shod over men far above him in rank, were tired of his ascendancy, and saw no hope of ending it but by ending the war. Thus a peace party grew up, and the young King became its real, though not at first its declared, supporter.

The Tory party, long buried, showed signs of resurrection. There were those among its members who, even in a king of the hated line of Hanover, could recognize and admire the same spirit of arbitrary domination that had marked their fallen idols, the Stuarts; and they now joined hands with the discontented Whigs in opposition to Pitt. The horrors of war, the blessings of peace, the weight of taxation, the growth of the national debt, were the rallying cries of the new party; but the mainspring of their zeal was hostility to the great minister. Even his own colleagues chafed under his spirit of mastery; the chiefs of the Opposition longed to inherit his power; and the King had begun to hate him as a lion in his path. Pitt held to his purpose regardless of the gathering storm. That purpose, as proclaimed by his adherents, was to secure a solid and lasting peace, which meant the reduction of France to so low an estate that she could no more be a danger to her rival. In this he had the sympathy of the great body of the nation.

Early in 1761 the King, a fanatic for prerogative, set his enginery in motion. The elections for the new Parliament were manipulated in his interest. If he disliked Pitt as the representative of the popular will, he also disliked his colleague, the shuffling and uncertain Newcastle, as the representative of a too powerful nobility. Elements hostile to both were introduced into the Cabinet and the great offices. The King's favorite, the Earl of Bute, supplanted Holderness as Secretary of State for the Northern Department; Charles Townshend, an opponent of Pitt, was made Secretary of War; Legge, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was replaced by Viscount Barrington, who was sure for the King; while a place in the Cabinet was also given to the Duke of Bedford, one of the few men who dared face the formidable minister. It was the policy of the King and his following to abandon Prussia, hitherto supported by British subsidies, make friends with Austria and Russia at her expense, and conclude a separate peace with France.

France was in sore need of peace. The infatuation that had turned her from her own true interest to serve the passions of Maria Theresa and the Czarina Elizabeth had brought military humiliation and financial ruin. Abbé de Bernis, Minister of Foreign Affairs, had lost the favor of Madame de Pompadour, and had been supplanted by the Duc de Choiseul. The new minister had gained his place by pleasing the favorite; but he kept it through his own ability and the necessities of the time. The Englishman Stanley, whom Pitt sent to negotiate with him, drew this sketch of his character: "Though he may have his superiors, not only in experience of business, but in depth and refinement as a statesman, he is a person of as bold and daring a spirit as any man whatever in our country or in his own. Madame Pompadour has ever been looked upon by all preceding courtiers and ministers as their tutelary deity, under whose auspices only they could exist, and who was as much out of their reach as if she were of a superior class of beings; but this Minister is so far from being in subordination to her influence that he seized the first opportunity of depriving her not of an equality, but of any share of power, reducing her to the necessity of applying to him even for those favors that she wants for herself and her dependents. He has effected this great change, which every other man would have thought impossible, in the interior of the Court, not by plausibility, flattery, and address, but with a high hand, with frequent raileries and sarcasms which would have ruined any other, and, in short, by a clear superiority of spirit and resolution."¹

Choiseul was vivacious, brilliant, keen, penetrating; believing nothing, fearing nothing; an easy

¹ Stanley to Pitt, 6 August, 1761, in Grenville Correspondence, i. 367, note.

oralist, an uncertain ally, a hater of priests; light-headed, inconstant; yet a kind of patriot, eager to serve France and retrieve her fortunes.

He flattered himself with no illusions. "Since we do not know how to make war," he said, "we must make peace;"¹ and he proposed a congress of all the belligerent Powers at Augsburg. At the same time, since the war in Germany was distinct from the maritime and colonial war of France and England, he proposed a separate negotiation with the British court in order to settle the questions between them as a preliminary to the general pacification. Pitt consented, and Stanley went as envoy to Versailles; while M. de Bussy came as envoy to London and, in behalf of Choiseul, offered terms of peace, the first of which was the entire abandonment of Canada to England.² But the offers were accompanied by the demand that Spain, which had complaints of its own against England, should be admitted as a party to the negotiation, and even hold in some measure the attitude of a mediator. Pitt spurned the idea with fierce contempt. "Time enough to treat of all that, sir, when the Tower of London is taken sword in hand."³ He bore his part with the ability that never failed him, and with a supreme arrogance that rose to a climax in his demand that the fortress of Dunkirk should be demolished, not because it was any longer dangerous to England, but because the nation would regard its destruction "as an eternal monument of the yoke imposed on France."¹

¹ Flassan, Diplomatie Française, v 376 (Paris, 1809).

² See the proposals in Entick, v 161.

³ Beatson, Military Memoirs, II 434 The Count de Fuentes to the Earl of Egremont, 25 December, 1761, in Entick, v. 264.

Choiseul replied with counter-propositions less humiliating to his nation. When the question of accepting or rejecting them came before the ministry, the views of Pitt prevailed by a majority of one, and, to the disappointment of Bute and the King, the conferences were broken off. Choiseul, launched again on the billows of a disastrous war, had seen and provided against the event. Ferdinand VI. of Spain had died, and Carlos III. had succeeded to his throne. Here, as in England, change of kings brought change of policy. While negotiating vainly with Pitt, the French minister had negotiated secretly and successfully with Carlos; and the result was the treaty known as the Family Compact, having for its object the union of the various members of the House of Bourbon in common resistance to the growing power of England. It provided that in any future war the Kings of France and Spain should act as one towards foreign Powers, insomuch that the enemy of either should be the enemy of both; and the Bourbon princes of Italy were invited to join in the covenant.¹ What was more to the present purpose, a special agreement was concluded on the same day, by which Spain bound herself to declare war against England unless that Power should make peace with France before the first of May, 1762. For the safety of her colonies and her trade Spain felt it her interest to join her sister nation in putting a check on the vast expansion of British maritime power. She could bring a hundred ships of war to aid the dilapidated navy of France, and the wealth of the Indies to aid her ruined treasury.

¹ On this negotiation, see Mémoires historiques sur la Négociation de la France et de l'Angleterre (Paris, 1761), a French government publication containing papers on both sides. The British ministry also published such documents as they saw fit, under the title of Papers relating to the Rupture with Spain. Compare Adolphus, George III, i. 31-39.

Pitt divined the secret treaty, and soon found evidence of it. He resolved to demand at once full explanation from Spain; and, failing to receive a satisfactory reply, attack her at home and abroad before she was prepared. On the second of October he laid his plan before a Cabinet Council held at a house in St. James Street. There were present the Earl of Bute, the Duke of Newcastle, Earl Granville, Earl Temple, and others of the ministry. Pitt urged his views with great warmth. "This," he exclaimed, "is the time for humbling the whole House of Bourbon!"² His brother-in-law, Temple, supported him. Newcastle kept silent. Bute denounced the proposal, and the rest were of his mind. "If these views are to be followed," said Pitt, "this is the last time I can sit at this board. I was called to the administration of affairs by the voice of the people; to them I have always considered myself as accountable for my conduct; and therefore cannot remain in a situation which makes me responsible for measures I am no longer allowed to guide." Nothing could be more offensive to George III. and his adherents.

¹ Flissan, Diplomatie Française, v. 317 (Paris, 1809).

² Beatson, ii. 438.

The veteran Carteret, Earl Granville, replied angrily: "I find the gentleman is determined to leave us; nor can I say I am sorry for it, since otherwise he would certainly have compelled us to leave him. But if he is resolved to assume the office of exclusively advising His Majesty and directing the operations of the war, to what purpose are we called to this council? When he talks of being responsible to the people, he talks the language of the House of Commons, and forgets that at this board he is responsible only to the King. However, though he may possibly have convinced himself of his infallibility, still it remains that we should be equally convinced before we can resign our understandings to his direction, or join with him in the measure he proposes."¹

Pitt resigned, and his colleagues rejoiced.² Power fell to Bute and the Tories; and great was the fall. The mass of the nation was with the defeated minister. On Lord Mayor's Day Bute and Barrington were passing St. Paul's in a coach, which the crowd

¹ Annual Register, 1761, p. 44. Adolphus, George III., i. 40. Thackeray, Life of Chatham, i. 592.

² Walpole, George III., i. 80 and note by Sir Denis Le Marchant, 80-82.

mistook for that of Pitt, and cheered lustily; till one man, looking in at the window, shouted to the rest: "This is n't Pitt; it's Bute, and be damned to him!" The cheers turned forthwith to hisses, mixed with cries of "No Bute!" "No Newcastle salmon!" "Pitt forever!" Handfuls of mud were showered against the coach, and Barrington's ruffles were besmirched with it.¹

The fall of Pitt was like the knell of doom to Frederic of Prussia. It meant abandonment by his only ally, and the loss of the subsidy which was his chief resource. The darkness around him grew darker yet, and not a hope seemed left; when as by miracle the clouds broke, and light streamed out of the blackness. The bitterest of his foes, the Czarina Elizabeth, she whom he had called infâme catin du Nord, died, and was succeeded by her nephew, Peter III. Here again, as in England and Spain, a new sovereign brought new measures. The young Czar, simple and enthusiastic, admired the King of Prussia, thought him the paragon of heroes, and proclaimed himself his friend. No sooner was he on the throne than Russia changed front. From the foe of Frederic she became his ally; and in the opening campaign of 1762 the army that was to have aided in crushing him was ranged on his side. It was a turn of fortune too sharp and sudden to endure. Ill-balanced and extreme in all things, Peter plunged into headlong reforms, exasperated the clergy and the army, and alienated his wife, Catherine, who had hoped to rule in his name, and who now saw herself supplanted by his mistress. Within six months he was deposed and strangled. Catherine, one of whose lovers had borne part in the murder, reigned in his stead, conspicuous by the unbridled disorders of her life, and by powers of mind that mark her as the ablest of female sovereigns. If she did not share her husband's enthusiasm for Frederic, neither did she share Elizabeth's hatred of him. He, on his part, taught by hard experience, conciliated instead of insulting her, and she let him alone.

¹ Nuthall to Lady Chatham, 12 November, 1761, in Chatham Correspondence, n. 166.

Peace with Russia brought peace with Sweden, and Austria with the Germanic Empire stood alone against him. France needed all her strength to hold her own against the mixed English and German force under Ferdinand of Brunswick in the Rhine countries. She made spasmodic efforts to seize upon Hanover, but the result was humiliating defeat.

In England George III. pursued his policy of strengthening the prerogative, and, jealous of the Whig aristocracy, attacked it in the person of Newcastle. In vain the old politician had played false with Pitt, and trimmed to please his young master. He was worried into resigning his place in the Cabinet, and Bute, the obsequious agent of the royal will, succeeded him as First Lord of the Treasury. Into his weak and unwilling hands now fell the task of carrying on the war; for the nation, elated with triumphs and full of fight, still called on its rulers for fresh efforts and fresh victories. Pitt had proved a true prophet, and his enemies were put to shame; for the attitude of Spain forced Bute and his colleagues to the open rupture with her which the great minister had vainly urged upon them; and a new and formidable war was now added to the old.¹ Their counsels were weak and half-hearted; but the armies and navies of England still felt the impulsion that the imperial hand of Pitt had given and the unconquerable spirit that he had roused.

This spirit had borne them from victory to victory. In Asia they had driven the French from Pondicherry and all their Indian possessions; in Africa they had wrested from them Gorée and the Senegal country; in the West Indies they had taken Guadeloupe and Dominica; in the European seas they had captured ship after ship, routed and crippled the great fleet of Admiral Conflans, seized Belleisle, and defeated a bold attempt to invade Ireland. The navy of France was reduced to helplessness. Pitt, before his resignation, had planned a series of new operations, including an attack on Martinique, with other West Indian islands still left to France, and then in turn on the Spanish possessions of Havana, Panama, Manila, and the Philippines. Now, more than ever before, the war appeared in its true character. It was a contest for maritime and colonial ascendancy; and England saw herself confronted by both her great rivals at once.

¹ Declaration of War against the King of Spain, 4 January, 1762

Admiral Rodney sailed for Martinique, and Brigadier Monckton joined him with troops from America. Before the middle of February the whole island was in their hands; and Grenada, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent soon shared its fate. The Earl of Albemarle and Admiral Sir George Pococke sailed in early spring on a more important errand, landed in June near Havana with eleven thousand soldiers, and attacked Moro Castle, the key of the city. The pitiless sun of the tropic midsummer poured its fierce light and heat on the parched rocks where the men toiled at the trenches. Earth was so scarce that hardly enough could be had to keep the fascines in place. The siege works were little else than a mass of dry fagots; and when, after exhausting toil, the grand battery opened on the Spanish defences, it presently took fire, was consumed, and had to be made anew. Fresh water failed, and the troops died by scores from thirst; fevers set in, killed many, and disabled nearly half the army. The sea was strewn with floating corpses, and carrion-birds in clouds hovered over the populous graveyards and infected camps. Yet the siege went on: a formidable sally was repulsed; Moro Castle was carried by storm; till at length, two months and eight days after the troops landed, Havana fell into their hands.¹ At the same time Spain was attacked at the antipodes, and the loss of Manila and the Philippines gave her fresh cause to repent her rash compact with France. She was hardly more fortunate near home; for having sent an army to invade Portugal, which was in the interest of England, a small British force, under Brigadier Bugeoyne, foiled it, and forced it to retire.

¹ Journal of the Siege, by the Chief Engineer, in Beatson, ii. 544. Mante, 398-465. Entick, v. 363-383

The tide of British success was checked for an instant in Newfoundland, where a French squadron attacked St. John's and took it, with its garrison of sixty men. The news reached Amherst at New York; his brother, Lieutenant-Colonel Amherst, was sent to the scene of the mishap. St. John's was retaken, and its late conquerors were made prisoners of war.

The financial condition of France was desperate. Her people were crushed with taxation; her debt grew apace; and her yearly expenditure was nearly double her revenue. Choiseul felt the need of immediate peace; and George III. and Bute were hardly less eager for it, to avert the danger of Pitt's return to power and give free scope to their schemes for strengthening the prerogative. Therefore, in September, 1762, negotiations were resumed. The Duke of Bedford was sent to Paris to settle the preliminaries, and the Duc de Nivernois came to London on the same errand. The populace were still for war. Bedford was hissed as he passed through the streets of London, and a mob hooted at the puny figure of Nivernois as he landed at Dover.

The great question was, Should Canada be restored? Should France still be permitted to keep a foothold on the North American continent? Ever since the capitulation of Montreal a swarm of pamphlets had discussed the momentous subject. Some maintained that the acquisition of Canada was not an original object of the war; that the colony was of little value and ought to be given back to its old masters; that Guadeloupe should be kept instead, the sugar-trade of that island being worth far more than the Canadian fur-trade; and, lastly, that the British colonists, if no longer held in check by France, would spread themselves over the continent, learn to supply all their own wants, grow independent, and become dangerous. Nor were these views confined to Englishmen. There were foreign observers who clearly saw that the adhesion of her colonies to Great Britain would be jeopardized by the extinction of French power in America. Choiseul warned Stanley that they "would not fail to shake off their dependence the moment Canada should be ceded;" while thirteen years before, the Swedish traveller Kalm declared that the presence of the French in America gave the best assurance to Great Britain that its own colonies would remain in due subjection.¹

The most noteworthy argument on the other side was that of Franklin, whose words find a strange commentary in the events of the next few years. He affirmed that the colonies were so jealous of each

¹ Kalm, Travels in North America, i. 207.

er that they would never unite against England. If they could not agree to unite against the French and Indians, can it reasonably be supposed that there is any danger of their uniting against their own nation, which it is well known they all love much more than they love one another? I will venture to say that union amongst them for such a purpose is not only improbable, it is impossible;" that is, he evidently adds, without "the most grievous tyranny and oppression," like the bloody rule of "Alva in the Netherlands." ¹

If Pitt had been in office he would have demanded terms that must ruin past redemption the maritime and colonial power of France; but Bute was less exacting. In November the plenipotentiaries of England, France, and Spain agreed on preliminaries of peace, in which the following were the essential points. France ceded to Great Britain Canada and her possessions on the North American continent west of the river Mississippi, except the city of New Orleans and a small adjacent district. She renounced her claims to Acadia, and gave up to the conqueror Interest of Great Britain in regard to her Colonies (London, 1760).

Lord Bath argues for retaining Canada in A Letter addressed to Two Great Men on the Prospect of Peace (1759). He is answered by another pamphlet called Remarks on the Letter to Two Great Men (1760). The Gentleman's Magazine for 1759 has an ironical article styled Reasons for restoring Canada to the French, and in 1761 a pamphlet against the restitution appeared under the title, Importance of Canada considered in Two Letters to a Noble Lord. These are but a part of the writings on the question.

the Island of Cape Breton, with all other islands in the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence. Spain received back Havana, and paid for it by the cession of Florida, with all her other possessions east of the Mississippi. France, subject to certain restrictions, was left free to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and off a part of the coast of Newfoundland; and the two little islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon were given her as fishing stations on condition that she should not fortify or garrison them. In the West Indies, England restored the captured islands of Guadeloupe; Marigalante, Désirade, and Martinique, and France ceded Grenada and the Grenadines; while it was agreed that of the so-called neutral islands, St. Vincent, Dominica, and Tobago should belong to England, and St. Lucia to France. In Europe, each side promised to give no more help to its allies in the German war. France restored Minorca, and England restored Belleisle; France gave up such parts of Hanoverian territory as she had occupied, and evacuated certain fortresses belonging to Prussia, pledging herself at the same time to demolish, under the inspection of English engineers, her own maritime fortress of Dunkirk. In Africa France ceded Senegal, and received back the small Island of Gorée. In India she lost everything she had gained since the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle; recovered certain trading stations, but renounced the right of building forts or maintaining troops in Bengal.

On the day when the preliminaries were signed,

France made a secret agreement with Spain, by which she divested herself of the last shred of her possessions on the North American continent. As compensation for Florida, which her luckless ally had lost in her quarrel, she made over to the Spanish Crown the city of New Orleans, and under the name of Louisiana gave her the vast region spreading westward from the Mississippi towards the Pacific.

On the ninth of December the question of approving the preliminaries came up before both Houses of Parliament. There was a long debate in the Commons. Pitt was not present, confined, it was said, by gout; till late in the day the House was startled by repeated cheers from the outside. The doors opened, and the fallen minister entered, carried in the arms of his servants, and followed by an applauding crowd. His bearers set him down within the bar, and by the help of a crutch he made his way with difficulty to his seat. "There was a mixture of the very solemn and the theatric in this apparition," says Walpole, who was present. "The moment was so well timed, the importance of the man and his services, the languor of his emaciated countenance, and the study bestowed on his dress were circumstances that struck solemnity into a patriot mind, and did a little furnish ridicule to the hardened and insensible. He was dressed in black velvet, his legs and thighs wrapped in flannel, his feet covered with buskins of black cloth, and his hands with thick gloves." Not for the first time, he was utilizing his maladies for purposes of stage effect. He spoke for about three hours, sometimes standing, and sometimes seated; sometimes with a brief burst of power, more often with the accents of pain and exhaustion. He highly commended the retention of Canada, but denounced the leaving to France a share in the fisheries, as well as other advantages tending to a possible revival of her maritime power. But the Commons listened coldly, and by a great majority approved the preliminaries of peace.

These preliminaries were embodied in the definitive treaty concluded at Paris on the tenth of February, 1763. Peace between France and England brought peace between the warring nations of the Continent. Austria, bereft of her allies, and exhausted by vain efforts to crush Frederic, gave up the attempt in despair, and signed the treaty of Hubertsburg. The Seven Years' War was ended.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1763-1884.

CONCLUSION.

RESULTS OF THE WAR.— GERMANY. — FRANCE. — ENGLAND. — CANADA. — THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

"THIS," said Earl Granville on his death-bed, "has been the most glorious war and the most triumphant peace that England ever knew." Not all were so well pleased, and many held with Pitt that the House of Bourbon should have been forced to drain the cup of humiliation to the dregs. Yet the fact remains that the Peace of Paris marks an epoch than which none in modern history is more fruitful of grand results. With it began a new chapter in the annals of the world. To borrow the words of a late eminent writer, "It is no exaggeration to say that three of the many victories of the Seven Years' War determined for ages to come the destinies of mankind. With that of Rossbach began the re-creation of Germany; with that of Plassey the influence of Europe told for the first time since the days of Alexander on the nations of the East; with the triumph of Wolfe on the Heights of Abraham began the history of the United States."¹ ¹ Green, History of the English people, iv. 198 (London, 1880).

So far, however, as concerns the war in the Germanic countries, it was to outward seeming but a mad debauch of blood and rapine, ending in nothing but the exhaustion of the combatants. The havoc had been frightful. According to the King of Prussia's reckoning, 853,000 soldiers of the various nations had lost their lives, besides hundreds of thousands of non-combatants who had perished from famine, exposure, disease, or violence. And with all this waste of life not a boundary line had been changed. The rage of the two empresses and the vanity and spite of the concubine had been completely foiled. Frederic had defied them all, and had come out of the strife intact in his own hereditary dominions and master of all that he had snatched from the Empress-Queen; while Prussia, portioned out by her enemies as their spoil, lay depleted indeed, and faint with deadly striving, but crowned with glory, and with the career before her which, through tribulation and adversity, was to lead her at last to the headship of a united Germany.

Through centuries of strife and vicissitude the French monarchy had triumphed over nobles, parliaments, and people, gathered to itself all the forces of the State, beamed with illusive splendors under Louis the Great, and shone with the phosphorescence of decay under his contemptible successor; till now, robbed of prestige, burdened with debt, and mined with corruption, it was moving swiftly and more swiftly towards the abyss of ruin.

While the war hastened the inevitable downfall of the French monarchy, it produced still more notable effects. France under Colbert had embarked on a grand course of maritime and colonial enterprise, and followed it with an activity and vigor that promised to make her a great and formidable ocean power. It was she who led the way in the East, first trained the natives to fight her battles, and began that system of mixed diplomacy and war which, imitated by her rival, enabled a handful of Europeans to master all India. In North America her vast possessions dwarfed those of every other nation. She had built up a powerful navy and created an extensive foreign trade. All this was now changed. In India she was reduced to helpless inferiority, with total ruin in the future; and of all her boundless territories in North America nothing was left but the two island rocks on the coast of Newfoundland that the victors had given her for drying her codfish. Of her navy scarcely forty ships remained; all the rest were captured or destroyed. She was still great on the continent of Europe, but as a world power her grand opportunities were gone.

In England as in France the several members of the State had battled together since the national life began, and the result had been, not the unchecked domination of the Crown, but a system of balanced and adjusted forces, in which King, Nobility, and Commons all had their recognized places and their share of power. Thus in the war just ended two great conditions of success had been supplied: a people instinct with the energies of ordered freedom, and a masterly leadership to inspire and direct them.

All, and more than all, that France had lost England had won. Now, for the first time, she was beyond dispute the greatest of maritime and colonial Powers. Portugal and Holland, her precursors in ocean enterprise, had long ago fallen hopelessly behind. Two great rivals remained, and she had humbled the one and swept the other from her path. Spain, with vast American possessions, was sinking into the decay which is one of the phenomena of modern history; while France, of late a most formidable competitor, had abandoned the contest in despair. England was mistress of the seas, and the world was thrown open to her merchants, explorers, and colonists. A few years after the Peace the navigator Cook began his memorable series of voyages, and surveyed the strange and barbarous lands which after times were to transform into other Englands, vigorous children of this great mother of nations. It is true that a heavy blow was soon to fall upon her; her own folly was to alienate the eldest and greatest of her offspring. But nothing could rob her of the glory of giving birth to the United States; and, though politically severed, this gigantic progeny were to be not the less a source of growth and prosperity to the parent that bore them, joined with her in a triple kinship of laws, language, and blood. The war or series of wars that ended with the Peace of Paris secured the opportunities and set in action the forces that have planted English homes in every clime, and dotted the earth with English garrisons and posts of trade.

With the Peace of Paris ended the checkered story of New France; a story which would have been a lustory if faults of constitution and the bigotry and folly of rulers had not dwarfed it to an episode. Yet it is a noteworthy one in both its lights and its shadows: in the disinterested zeal of the founder of Quebec, the self-devotion of the early missionary martyrs, and the daring enterprise of explorers; in the spiritual and temporal vassalage from which the only escape was to the savagery of the wilderness; and in the swarming corruptions which were the natural result of an attempt to rule, by the absolute hand of a master beyond the Atlantic, a people bereft of every vestige of civil liberty. Civil liberty was given them by the British sword; but the conqueror left their religious system untouched, and through it they have imposed upon themselves a weight of ecclesiastical tutelage that finds few equals in the most Catholic countries of Europe. Such guardianship is not without certain advantages. When faithfully exercised it aids to uphold some of the tamer virtues, if that can be called a virtue which needs the constant presence of a sentinel to keep it from escaping: but it is fatal to mental robustness and moral courage; and if French Canada would fulfil its aspirations it must cease to be one of the most priest-ridden communities of the modern world.

Scarcely were they free from the incubus of France when the British provinces showed symptoms of revolt. The measures on the part of the mother-country which roused their resentment, far from being oppressive, were less burdensome than the navigation laws to which they had long submitted; and they resisted taxation by Parliament simply because it was in principle opposed to their rights as freemen. They did not, like the American provinces of Spain at a later day, sunder themselves from a parent fallen into decrepitude; but with astonishing audacity they affronted the wrath of England in the hour of her triumph, forgot their jealousies and quarrels, joined hands in the common cause, fought, endured, and won. The disunited colonies became the United States. The string of discordant communities along the Atlantic coast has grown to a mighty people, joined in a union which the earthquake of civil war served only to compact and consolidate. Those who in the weakness of their dissensions needed help from England against the savage on their borders have become a nation that may defy every foe but that most dangerous of all foes, herself, destined to a majestic future if she will shun the excess and perversion of the principles that made her great, prate less about the enemies of the past and strive more against the enemies of the present, resist the mob and the demagogue as she resisted Parliament and King, rally her powers from the race for gold and the delirium of prosperity to make firm the foundations on which that prosperity rests, and turn some fair proportion of her vast mental forces to other objects than material progress and the game of party politics. She has tamed the savage continent, peopled the solitude, gathered wealth untold, waxed potent, imposing, redoubtable; and now it remains for her to prove, if she can, that the rule of the masses is consistent with the highest growth of the individual; that democracy can give the world a civilization as mature and pregnant, ideas as energetic and vitalizing, and types of manhood as lofty and strong, as any of the systems which it boasts to supplant.

APPENDIX.

A.

CHAPTER III. CONFLICT FOR THE WEST.

Piquet and his War-Party.—“Ce parti [de guerre] pour lequel M le Général a donné son consentement, sera de plus de 3,800 hommes. . . . 500 hommes de nos domiciliés, 700 des Cinq nations à l'exclusion des Agniers [Mohawks] qui ne sont plus regardés que comme des anglais, 600 tant Iroquois que d'autres nations le long de la Belle Rivière d'où ils espèrent chasser les anglais qui y forment des Établissemens contraires au bien des guerriers, 2,000 hommes qu'ils doivent prendre aux têtes plates [Choctaws] où ils s'arrêteront, c'est là où les deux chefs de guerre doivent proposer à l'armée l'expédition des Miamis au retour de celle contre la Nation du Chien [Cherokees]. Un vieux levain, quelques anciennes querelles leur feront tout entreprendre contre les anglais de la Virginie s'ils donnent encore quelques secours à cette dernière nation, ce qui ne manquera pas d'arriver. . . .

“C'est un grand miracle que malgré l'envie, les contradictions, l'opposition presque générale de tous les Villages sauvages, j'aye formé en moins de 3 ans une des plus florissantes missions du Canada. . . . Je me trouve donc, Messieurs, dans l'occasion de pouvoir étendre l'empire de Jésus Christ et du Roy mes bons maîtres jusqu'aux extrémités de ce nouveau monde, et de plus faire avec quelques secours que vous me procurerez que la France et l'Angleterre ne pourraient faire avec plusieurs millions et toutes leur troupes" Copie de la Lettre écrite par M. l'Abbé Picquet, dattée à la Présentation du 8 Fév. 1752 (Archives de la Marine).

I saw in the possession of the late Jacques Viger, of Montreal, an illuminated drawing of one of Piquet's banners, said to be still in existence, in which the cross, the emblems of the Virgin and the Saviour, the fleur de lis, and the Iroquois totems are all embroidered and linked together by strings of wampum beads wrought into the silk.

Directions of the French Colonial Minister for the Destruction of Oswego. — "La seule voye dont on puisse faire usage en temps de paix pour une pareille opération est celle des Iroquois des cinq nations. Les terres sur lesquelles le poste a été établi leur appartiennent et ce n'est qu'avec leur consentement que les anglois s'y sont placés. Si en faisant regarder à ces sauvages un pareil établissement comme contraire à leur liberté et comme une usurpation dont les anglois prétendent faire usage pour acquérir la propriété de leur terre on pourrait les déterminer à entreprendre de les détruire, une pareille opération ne seroit pas à négliger ; mais M. le Marquis de la Jonquière doit sentir avec quelle circonspection une affaire de cette espèce doit être conduite et il faut en effet qu'il y travaille de façon à ne se point compromettre." Le Ministre à MM. de la Jonquière et Bigot, 15 Avril, 1750 (Archives de la Marine).

B.

CHAPTER IV. ACADIA.

English Treatment of Acadians. — “Les Anglois dans la vue de la Conquête du Canada ont voulu donner aux peuples françois de ces Colonies un exemple frappant de la douceur de leur gouvernement dans leur conduite à l'égard des Accadiens.

“Ils leur ont fourni pendant plus de 35 ans le simple nécessaire, sans élever la fortune d'aucun, ils leur ont fourni ce nécessaire souvent à crédit, avec un excès de confiance, sans fatiguer les débiteurs, sans les presser, sans vouloir les forcer au payement “Ils leur ont laissé une apparence de liberté si excessive qu'ils n'ont voulu prendre aucune différence [sic] de leur différens, pas même pour les crimes. . . . Ils ont souffert que les accadiens leur refusassent insolemment certains rentes de grains, modiques & très-légitimement dues.

“Ils ont dissimulé le refus méprisant que les accadiens ont fait de prendre d'eux des concessions pour les nouveaux terrains qu'ils voulaient occuper.

“Les fruits que cette conduite a produit dans la dernière guerre nous le savons [sic] et les anglois n'en ignorent rien. Qu'on juge là-dessus de leur ressentiment et des vues de vengeance de cette nation cruelle. . . Je prévois notamment la dispersion des jeunes accadiens sur les vaisseaux de guerre anglois, où la seule règle pour la ration du pain suffit pour les détruire jusqu'au dernier.” Roma, Officier à l'Isle Royale à —, 1750

Indians, directed by Missionaries, to attack the English in Time of Peace. — “La lettre de M. l'Abbé Le Loutre me paroît si intéressante que j'ay l'honneur de vous en envoyer Copie. . . . Les trois sauvages qui m'ont porté ces dépêches m'ont parlé relativement à ce que M. l'Abbé Le Loutre marque dans sa lettre ; je n'ay eu garde de leur donner aucun Conseil là-dessus et je me suis borné à leur promettre que je ne les abandonnerai point, aussy ai-je pourvu à tout, soit pour les armes, munitions de guerre et de bouche, soit pour les autres choses nécessaires.

“ Il seroit à souhaiter que ces Sauvages rassemblés pussent parvenir à traverser les anglois dans leurs entreprises, même dans celle de Ohibouctou [Halifax], ils sont dans cette résolution et s'ils peuvent mettre à execution ce qu'ils ont projeté il est assuré qu'ils seront fort incommodes aux Anglois et que les vexations qu'ils exerceront sur eux leur seront un très grand obstacle.

“ Ces sauvages doivent agir seuls, il n'y aura ny soldat ny habitant, tout se fera de leur pur mouvement, et sans qu'il paraisse que j'en eusse connoissance.

“ Cela est très essentiel, aussy ai-je écrit au Sr de Boishébert d'observer beaucoup de prudence dans ses démarches et de les faire très secrètement pour que les Anglois ne puissent pas s'apercevoir que nous pourvoyons aux besoins des dits sauvages.

“ Ce seront les missionnaires qui feront toutes les négociations et qui dirigeront les pas des dits sauvages, ils sont en très bonnes mains, le R. P. Germain et M. l'Abbé Le Loutre étant fort au fait d'en tirer tout le party possible et le plus avantageux pour nos intérêts, ils ménageront leur intrigue de façon à n'y pas paroître . . .

“ Je sens, Monseigneur, toute la délicatesse de cette négociation, soyez persuadé que je la conduirai avec tant de précautions que les anglois ne pourront pas dire que mes ordres y ont eu part." La Jonquière au Ministre, 9 Oct. 1749 Missionaries to be encouraged in their Efforts to make the Indians attack the English. — "Les sauvages . . . se distinguent, depuis la paix, dans les mouvements qu'il y a du côté de l'Acadie, et sur lesquels Sa Majesté juge à propos d'entrer dans quelques détails avec le Sieur de Raymond. . . .

"Sa Majesté luy a déjà observé que les sauvages ont été jusqu'à présent dans les dispositions les plus favorables. Il est de la plus grande importance, et pour le présent et pour l'avenir, de ne rien négliger pour les y maintenir. Les missionnaires qui sont auprès d'eux sont plus à portés d'y contribuer que personne, et Sa Majesté a lieu d'être satisfaite des soins qu'ils y donnent. Le S^r de Raymond doit exciter ces missionnaires à ne point se relâcher sur cela; mais en même temps il doit les avertir de contenir leur zèle de manière qu'ils ne se compromettent pas mal à propos avec les anglois et qu'ils ne donnent point de justes sujets de plaintes." Mémoire du Roy pour servir d'Instruction au Comte de Raymond, 24 Avril, 1751

Acadians to join the Indians in attacking the English. — "Pour que ces Sauvages agissent avec beaucoup de Courage, quelques accadiens habillés et matachés comme les Sauvages pourront se joindre à eux pour faire coup sur les Anglois. Je ne puis éviter de consentir à ce que ces Sauvages feront puisque nous avons les bras liés et que nous ne pouvons rien faire par nous-mêmes, au surplus je ne crois pas qu'il y ait de l'inconvenient de laisser mêler les accadiens parmi les Sauvages, parceque s'ils sont pris, nous dirons qu'ils ont agi de leur propre mouvement." La Jonquière au Ministre, 1 Mai, 1751.

Cost of Le Loutre's Intrigues. — "J'ay déjà fait payer a M. Le Loutre depuis l'année dernière la somme de 11183*l*. 18*s*. pour acquitter les dépenses qu'il fait journellement et je ne cesse de luy recommander de s'en tenir aux indispensables en evitant toujours de rien compromettre avec le gouvernement anglois." Prévost au Ministre, 22 Juillet, 1750.

Payment for English Scalps in Time of Peace. — "Les Sauvages ont pris, il y a un mois, 18 chevelures angloises [English scalps], et M. Le Loutre a été obligé de les payer 1800*l*, argent de l'Acadie, dont je luy ay fait le remboursement." Ibid., 16 Août, 1753.

Many pages might be filled with extracts like the above. These, with most of the other French documents used in Chapter IV., are taken from the Archives de la Marine et des Colonies.

C.

CHAPTER V. WASHINGTON.

Washington and the Capitulation at Fort Necessity. — Villiers, in his Journal, boasts that he made Washington sign a virtual admission that he had assassinated Jumonville. In regard to this point, a letter, of which the following is an extract, is printed in the provincial papers of the time. It is from Captain Adam Stephen, an officer in the action, writing to a friend five weeks after.

"When Mr. Vanbraam returned with the French proposals, we were obliged to take the sense of them from his mouth; it rained so heavy that he could not give us a written translation of them; we could scarcely keep the candle lighted to read them by; they were written in a bad hand, on wet and blotted paper, so that no person could read them but Vanbraam, who had heard them from the mouth of the French officer. Every officer there is ready to declare that there was no such word as assassination mentioned. The terms expressed were, the death of Jumonville. If it had been mentioned we would by all means have had it altered, as the French, during the course of the interview, seemed very condescending, and desirous to bring things to an issue." He then gives several other points in which Vanbraam had misled them.

Dinwiddie, recounting the affair to Lord Albemarle, says that Washington, being ignorant of French, was deceived by the interpreter, who, through poltroonery, suppressed the word assassination.

Captain Mackay, writing to Washington in September, after a visit to Philadelphia, says "I had several disputes about our capitulation; but I satisfied every person that mentioned the subject as to the articles in question, that they were owing to a bad interpreter, and contrary to the translation made to us when we signed them."

At the next meeting of the burgesses they passed a vote of thanks for gallant conduct to Washington and all his officers by name, except Vanbraam and the major of the regiment, the latter being charged with cowardice, and the former with treacherous misinterpretation of the articles.

Sometime after, Washington wrote to a correspondent who had questioned him on the subject: "That we were wilfully or ignorantly deceived by our interpreter in regard to the word assassination I do aver, and will to my dying moment; so will every officer that was present. The interpreter was a Dutchman little acquainted with the English tongue, therefore might not advert to the tone and meaning of the word in English; but, whatever his motives for so doing, certain it is that he called it the death or the loss of the Sieur Jumonville. So we received and so we understood it, until, to our great surprise and mortification, we found it otherwise in a literal translation." Sparks, Writings of Washington, II. 464, 465.

D.

CHAPTER VII. BRADDOCK.

It has been said that Beaujeu, and not Contrecoeur, commanded at Fort Duquesne at the time of Braddock's expedition. Some contemporaries, and notably the chaplain of the fort, do, in fact, speak of him as in this position; but their evidence is overborne by more numerous and conclusive authorities, among them Vaudreuil, governor of Canada, and Contrecoeur himself, in an official report. Vaudreuil says of him: "Ce commandant s'occupa le 8 [Juillet] à former un parti pour aller au devant des Anglois;" and adds that this party was commanded by Beaujeu and consisted of 250 French and 650 Indians (Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Août, 1755). In the autumn of 1756 Vaudreuil asked the Colonial Minister to procure a pension for Contrecoeur and Ligneris. He says: "Le premier de ces Messieurs a commandé longtemps au fort Duquesne; c'est luy qui a ordonné et dirigé tous les mouvements qui se sont faits dans cette partie, soit pour faire abandonner le premier établissement des Anglois, soit pour les forcer à se retirer du fort Nécessité, et soit enfin pour aller au devant de l'armée du Général Braddock qui a été entièrement défaite" (Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Nov. 1756) Beaujeu, who had lately arrived with a reinforcement, had been named to relieve Contrecoeur (Dumas au Ministre, 24 Juillet, 1756), but had not yet done so.

As the report of Contrecoeur has never been printed, I give an extract from it (Contrecoeur à Vaudreuil, 14 Juillet, 1755, in Archives de la Marine) —

"Le même jour [8 Juillet] je formai un party de tout ce que je pouvois mettre hors du fort pour aller à leur rencontre. Il étoit composé de 250 François et de 650 sauvages, ce qui faisoit 900 hommes. M. de Beaujeu, capitaine, le commandoit Il y avoit deux capitaines qui estoient M^{re} Dumas et Ligneris et plusieurs autres officiers subalternes. Ce parti se mit en marche le 9 à 8 heures du matin, et se trouva à midi et demie en présence des Anglois à environ 3 lieues du fort. On commença à faire feu de part et d'autre. Le feu de l'artillerie ennemie fit reculer un peu par deux fois notre parti. M. de Beaujeu fut tué à la troisième décharge M. Dumas prit le commandement et s'en acquitta au mieux. Nos François, pleins de courage, soutenus par les sauvages, quoiqu'ils n'eussent point d'artillerie, firent à leur tour plier les Anglois qui se battirent en ordre de bataille et en bonne contenance. Et ces derniers voyant l'ardeur de nos gens qui faisoient avec une vigueur infinie furent enfin obligés de plier tout à fait après 4 heures d'un grand feu. M^{re} Dumas et Ligneris qui n'avoient plus avec eux qu'une vingtaine de François ne s'engagerent point dans la poursuite. Ils rentrèrent dans le fort, parcequ'une grande partie des Canadiens qui n'estoient malheureusement que des enfants s'estoient retirés à la première décharge."

The letter of Dumas cited in the text has been equally unknown. It was written a year after the battle in order to draw the attention of the minister to services which the writer thought had not been duly recognized. The following is an extract (Dumas au Ministre, 24 Juillet, 1756, in Archives de la Marine) :—

“ M. de Beaujeu marcha donc, et sous ses ordres M. de Ligneris et moi. Il attaqua avec beaucoup d’audace mais sans nulle disposition ; notre première décharge fut faite hors de portée ; l’ennemi fit la sienne de plus près, et dans le premier instant du combat, cent miliciens, qui faisaient la moitié de nos Français lâcherent honteusement le pied en criant ‘Sauve qui peut.’ Deux cadets qui depuis ont été faits officiers autorisèrent cette fuite par leur exemple. Ce mouvement en arrière ayant encouragé l’ennemi, il fit retentir ses cris de Vive le Roi et avança sur nous à grand pas. Son artillerie s’étant préparée pendant ce temps là commença à faire feu ce qui épouvanta tellement les Sauvages que tout prit la fuite ; l’ennemi faisait sa troisième décharge de mousqueterie quand M. de Beaujeu fut tué.

“ Notre déroute se présenta à mes yeux sous le plus désagréable point de vue, et pour n’être point chargé de la mauvaise manœuvre d’autrui, je ne songeai plus qu’à me faire tuer. Ce fut alors, Monseigneur, qu’excitant de la voix et du geste le peu de soldats qui restait, je m’avançai avec la contenance qui donne le désespoir. Mon peloton fit un feu si vif que l’ennemi en parut étonné ; il grossit insensiblement et les Sauvages voyant que mon attaque faisait cesser les cris de l’ennemi revinrent à moi. Dans ce moment j’envoyai M. le Chev^r Le Borgne et M. de Rocheblave dire aux officiers qui étaient à la tête des Sauvages de prendre l’ennemi en flanc. Le canon qui battit en tête donna faveur à mes ordres. L’ennemi, pris de tous cotés, combattit avec la fermeté la plus opiniâtre. Des rangs entiers tombaient à la fois ; presque tous les officiers périrent ; et le désordre s'étant mis par là dans cette colonne, tout prit la fuite."

Whatever may have been the conduct of the Canadian militia, the French officers behaved with the utmost courage, and shared with the Indians the honors of the victory. The partisan chief Charles Langlade seems also to have been especially prominent. His grandson, the aged Pierre Grignon, declared that it was he who led the attack (Draper, Recollections of Grignon, in the Collections of the Wisconsin Historical Society, 111). Such evidence, taken alone, is of the least possible weight ; but both the traveller Anbury and General John Burgoyne, writing many years after the event, speak of Langlade, who was then alive, as the author of Braddock's defeat. Hence there can be little doubt that he took an important part in it, though the contemporary writers do not mention his name. Compare Tassé, Notice sur Charles Langlade. The honors fell to Contreœur, Dumas, and Ligneris, all of whom received the cross of the Order of St. Louis (Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1755).

E.

CHAPTER XIV. MONTCALM.

To show the style of Montcalm's familiar letters, I give a few examples. Literal translation is often impossible.

À MADAME DE MONTCALM, À MONTRÉAL, 16 AVRIL, 1757.

(Extrait)

"Ma santé assez bonne, malgré beaucoup de travail, surtout d'écriture. Estève, mon secretaire, se marie.

Beau caractère. Bon autographe, écrivant vite Je lui procure un emploi et le moyen de faire fortune s'il veut. Il fait un meilleur mariage que ne lui appartient; malgré cela je crains qu'il ne la fasse pas comme un autre; fat, frivole, joueur, glorieux, petit-maitre, dépensier. J'ai toujours Marcel, des soldats copistes dans le besoin. . . . Tous les soldats de Montpellier se portants bien, hors le fils de Pierre mort chez moi. Tout est hors de prix. Il faut vivre honorablement et je le fais, tous les jours seize personnes. Une fois tous les quinze jours chez M. le Gouverneur général et M^r le Chev. de Lévis qui vit aussi très bien. Il a donné trois beaux grands bals. Pour moi jusqu'au carême, outre les diners, de grands soupers de dames trois fois la semaine. Le jour des devotes prudes, des concerts. Les jours des jeûnes des violons d'hazard, parcequ'on me les demandait, cela ne menait que jusqu'à deux heures du matin et il se joignait l'après-souper compagnie dansante sans être priée, mais sure d'être bien reçue à celle qui avait soupé. Fort cher, peu amusant, et souvent ennuyeux. . . . Vous connaissez ma maison, je l'ai augmentée d'un cocher, d'un frotteur, un garçon de cuisine, et j'ai marié mon aide de cuisine; car je travaille à peupler la colonie: 80 mariages de soldats cet hiver et deux d'officiers. Germain a perdu sa fille. Il a épousé mieux que lui; bonne femme mais sans bien, comme toutes. . . ."

À MADAME DE MONTCALM, À MONTRÉAL, 6 JUIN, 1757.

(Extrait)

"J'adresse la première de cette lettre à ma mère. Il n'y a pas une heure dans la journée que je ne songe à vous, à elle, et à mes enfants. J'embrasse ma fille; je vous adore, ma très chère, ainsi que ma mère. Mille choses à mes sœurs. Je n'ai pas le temps de leur écrire, ni à Naujac, ni aux abbesses. . . . Des compliments au château d'Arbois, aux Du Cayla, et aux Givard. P S. N'oubliez pas d'envoyer une douzaine de bouteilles d'Angleterre de pinte d'eau de lavande; vous en mettiez quatre pour chaque envoi."

À BOURLAMAQUE, À MONTRÉAL, 20 FÉVRIER, 1757

(Extrait)

"Dimanche j'avais rassemblé les dames de France hors Mad. de Parfouru qui m'a fait l'honneur de me venir voir il y a trois jours et en la voyant je me suis aperçu que l'amour avait des traits de puissance dont on ne pouvait pas rendre raison, non pas par l'impression qu'elle a faite sur mon cœur, mais bien par celle qu'elle a faite sur celui de son époux. Mercredi une assemblée chez Mad Varin. Jeudi un bal chez le Chev. de Lévis qui avait pu 65 Dames ou demoiselles, Il n'y en avait que trente — autant d'hommes qu'à la guerre. Sa salle bien éclairée, aussi grand que celle de l'Intendance, beaucoup d'ordre, beaucoup d'attention, des rafraichissements en abondance toute la nuit de tout genre et de toute espèce et on ne se retira qu'à sept heures du matin. Pour moi qui ay quitté le séjour de Québec, Je me couchai de bonne heure J'avais eu ce jour-là huit dames à souper et ce souper était dédié à Mad. Varin. Demain j'en aurai une demi douzaine. Je ne sçai encore à qui il est dédié, Je suis tenté de croire que c'est à La Roche Beaucourt Le galant Chev' nous donne encore un bal."

F.

CHAPTER XV. FORT WILLIAM HENRY.

WEBB TO LONDON, FORT EDWARD, 11 AUG. 1757.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

"ON leaving the Camp Yesterday Morning they [the English soldiers] were stript by the Indians of everything they had both Officers and Men the Women and Children drag'd from among them and most inhumanly butchered before their faces, the party of about three hundred Men which were given them as an escort were during this time quietly looking on, from this and other circumstances we are too well convinced these barbarities must have been connived at by the French, After having destroyed the women and children they fell upon the rear of our Men who running in upon the Front soon put the whole to a most precipitate flight in which confusion part of them came into this Camp about two o'Clock yesterday morning in a most distressing situation, and have continued dropping in ever since, a great many men and we are afraid several Officers were massacred."

The above is independent of the testimony of Frye, who did not reach Fort Edward till the day after Webb's letter was written.

FRYE TO THOMAS HUBBARD, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF MASSACHUSETTS, ALBANY, 16 AUG. 1757.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

"We did not march till ye 10th at which time the Savages were let loose upon us, Strips, Kills, & Scalps our people drove them into Disorder Rendered it impossible to Rally, the French Gaurds we were promised shou'd Escort us to Fort Edward Could or would not protect us so that there Opened the most horrid Scene of Barbarity imaginable, I was strip'd myself of my Aims & Cloathing that I had nothing left but Briches Stockings Shoes & Shirt, the Indians round me with their Tomehawks Spears &c threatening Death I flew to the Officers of the French Gaurds for Protection but they would afford me none, therefore was Oblig'd to fly and was in the woods till the 12th in the Morning of which I arriv'd at Fort Edward almost Famished. . . . with what of Fatigue Starving &c I am obliged to break off but as soon as I can Recollect myself shall write to you more fully."

FRYE, JOURNAL OF THE ATTACK OF FORT WILLIAM HENRY.

Public Record Office (Extract.)

" Wednesday, August 10th. — Early this morning we were ordered to prepare for our march, but found the Indians in a worse temper (if possible) than last night, every one having a tomahawk, hatchett or some other instrument of death, and Constantly plundering from the officers their arms &c. this Col^o Monro Complained of, as a breach of the Articles of Capitulation but to no effect, the french officers however told us that if we would give up the baggage of the officers and men, to the Indians, they thought it would make them easy, which at last Col^o Monro Consented to but this was no sooner done, then they began to take the Officers Hatts, Swords, guns & Cloaths, stripping them all to their Shirts, and on some officers, left no shirt at all, while this was doing they killed and scalp'd all the sick and wounded before our faces and then took out from our troops, all the Indians and negroes, and Carried them off, one of the former they burnt alive afterwards.

“ At last with great difficulty the troops gott from the Retrenchment, but they were no sooner out, then the savages fell upon the rear, killing & scalping, which Occasioned an order for a halt, which at last was done in great Confusion but as soon as those in the front knew what was doing in the rear they again pressed forward, and thus the Confusion continued & encreased till we came to the Advanc’d guard of the French, the savages still carrying away Officers, privates, Women and Children, some of which latter they kill’d & scalpt in the road This horrid scene of blood and slaughter obliged our officers to apply to the Officers of the French Guard for protection, which they refus’d & told them they must take to the woods and shift for themselves which many did, and in all probabily many perish’t in the woods, many got into Fort Edward that day and others daily Continued coming in, but vastly fatigued with their former hardships added to this last, which threw several of them into Deliriums.”

AFFIDAVIT OF MILES WHITWORTH, SURGEON OF THE MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT, TAKEN BEFORE GOVERNOR POWNALL 17 OCT. 1757.

Public Record Office (Extract)

“ Being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists doth declare . . . that there were also seventeen Men of the Massachusetts Regiment wounded unable to March under his immediate Care in the Intrenched Camp, that according to the Capitulation he did deliver them over to the French Surgeon on the ninth of August at two in the Afternoon . . . that the French Surgeon received them into his Custody and placed Centinals of the French Troops upon the said seventeen wounded. That the French Surgeon going away to the French Camp, the said Miles Whitworth continued with the said wounded Men till five o'Clock on the Morn of the tenth of August, That the Centinals were taken off and that he the said Whitworth saw the French Indians about 5 O'Clock in the Morn of the 10th of August dragg the said seventeen wounded men out of their Hutts, Murder them with their Tomohawks and scalp them, That the French Troops posted round the lines were not further than forty feet from the Hutts where the said wounded Men lay, that several Canadian Officers particularly one Lacombe were present and that none, either Officer or Soldier, protected the said wounded Men.

"MILES WHITWORTH.

"Sworn before me T POWNALL."

G.

CHAPTER XX. TICONDEROGA.

THE French accounts of the battle at Ticonderoga are very numerous, and consist of letters and despatches of Montcalm, Lévis, Bougainville, Doreil, and other officers, besides several anonymous narratives, one of which was printed in pamphlet form at the time. Translations of many of them may be found in N. Y. Colonial Documents, x. There are, however, various others preserved in the archives of the War and Marine Departments at Paris which have not seen the light. I have carefully examined and collated them all. The English accounts are by no means so numerous or so minute. Among those not already cited, may be mentioned a letter of Colonel Woolsey of the New York provincials, and two letters from British officers written just after the battle and enclosed in a letter from Alexander Colden to Major Halkett, 17 July. (Bouquet and Halldimand Papers)

The French greatly exaggerated the force of the English and their losses in the battle. They place the former at from twenty thousand to thirty-one thousand, and the latter at from four thousand to six thousand. Prisoners taken at the end of the battle told them that the English had lost four thousand, — a statement which they readily accepted, though the prisoners could have known little more about the matter than they themselves. And these figures were easily magnified. The number of dead lying before the lines is variously given at from eight hundred to three thousand. Montcalm himself, who was somewhat elated by his victory, gives this last number in one of his letters, though he elsewhere says two thousand; while Lévis, in his Journal de la Guerre, says "about eight hundred." The truth is that no pains were taken to ascertain the exact number, which, by the English returns, was a little above five hundred, the total of killed, wounded, and missing being nineteen hundred and forty-four. A friend of Knox, writing to him from Fort Edward three weeks after the battle, gives a tabular statement which shows nineteen hundred and fifty in all, or six more than the official report. As the name of every officer killed or wounded, with the corps to which he belonged, was published at the time (London Magazine, 1758), it is extremely unlikely that the official return was falsified. Abercrombie's letter to Pitt, of July 12, says that he retreated "with the loss of four hundred and sixty-four regulars killed, twenty-nine missing, eleven hundred and seventeen wounded; and eighty-seven provincials killed, eight missing, and two hundred and thirty-nine wounded, officers of both included." In a letter to Viscount Barrington, of the same date (Public Record Office), Abercrombie encloses a full detail of losses, regiment by regiment and company by company, being a total of nineteen hundred and forty-five. Several of the French writers state correctly that about fourteen thousand men (including reserves) were engaged in the attack; but they add erroneously that there were thirteen thousand more at the Falls. In fact, there was only a small provincial regiment left there, and a battalion of the New York regiment, under Colonel Woolsey, at the landing.

A LEGEND OF TICONDEROGA. — Mention has been made of the death of Major Duncan Campbell of Inverawe. The following family tradition relating to it was told me in 1878 by the late Dean Stanley, to whom I am also indebted for various papers on the subject, including a letter from James Campbell, Esq., the present laird of Inverawe, and great-nephew of the hero of the tale. The same story is told, in an amplified form and with some variations, in the Legendary Tales of the Highlands of Sir Thomas Dick Lauder. As related by Dean Stanley and approved by Mr. Campbell, it is this : —

The ancient castle of Inverawe stands by the banks of the Awe, in the midst of the wild and picturesque scenery of the western Highlands. Late one evening, before the middle of the last century, as the laird, Duncan Campbell, sat alone in the old hall, there was a loud knocking at the gate; and, opening it, he saw a stranger, with torn clothing and kilt besmeared with blood, who in a breathless voice begged for asylum. He went on to say that he had killed a man in a fray, and that the pursuers were at his heels. Campbell promised to shelter him. "Swear on your dirk!" said the stranger; and Campbell swore. He then led him to a secret recess in the depths of the castle. Scarcely was he hidden when again there was a loud knocking at the gate, and two armed men appeared. "Your cousin Donald has been murdered, and we are looking for the murderer!" Campbell, remembering his oath, professed to have no knowledge of the fugitive; and the men went on their way. The laird, in great agitation, lay down to rest in a large dark room, where at length he fell asleep. Waking suddenly in bewilderment and terror, he saw the ghost of the murdered Donald standing by his bedside, and heard a hollow voice pronounce the words: "Inverawe! Inverawe! blood has been shed. Shield not the murderer!" In the morning Campbell went to the hiding-place of the guilty man and told him that he could harbor him no longer. "You have sworn on your dirk!" he replied; and the laird of Inverawe, greatly perplexed and troubled, made a compromise between conflicting duties, promised not to betray his guest, led him to the neighboring mountain, and hid him in a cave.

In the next night, as he lay tossing in feverish slumbers, the same stern voice awoke him, the ghost of his cousin Donald stood again at his bedside, and again he heard the same appalling words: "Inverawe! Inverawe! blood has been shed. Shield not the murderer!" At break of day he hastened, in strange agitation, to the cave; but it was empty, the stranger was gone. At night, as he strove in vain to sleep, the vision appeared once more, ghastly pale, but less stern of aspect than before. "Farewell, Inverawe!" it said; "Farewell, till we meet at TICONDEROGA!"

The strange name dwelt in Campbell's memory. He had joined the Black Watch, or Forty-second Regiment, then employed in keeping order in the turbulent Highlands. In time he became its major; and, a year or two after the war broke out, he went with it to America. Here, to his horror, he learned that it was ordered to the attack of Ticonderoga. His story was well known among his brother officers. They combined among themselves to disarm his fears; and when they reached the fatal spot they told him on the eve of the battle, "This is not Ticonderoga; we are not there yet; this is Fort George." But in the morning he came to them with haggard looks. "I have seen him! You have deceived me! He came to my tent last night! This is Ticonderoga! I shall die to-day!" and his prediction was fulfilled.

Such is the tradition. The indisputable facts are that Major Duncan Campbell of Inverawe, his arm shattered by a bullet, was carried to Fort Edward, where, after amputation, he died and was buried. (Abercrombie to Pitt, 19 August, 1758) The stone that marks his grave may still be seen, with this inscription: "Here lyes the Body of Duncan Campbell of Inverawe, Esq^r, Major to the old Highland Regiment, aged 55 Years, who died the 17th July, 1758, of the Wounds he received in the Attack of the Retrenchment of Ticonderoga or Carrillon, on the 8th July, 1758."

His son, Lieutenant Alexander Campbell, was severely wounded at the same time, but reached Scotland alive, and died in Glasgow.

Mr. Campbell, the present Inverawe, in the letter mentioned above, says that forty-five years ago he knew an old man whose grandfather was foster-brother to the slain major of the forty-second, and who told him the following story while carrying a salmon for him to an inn near Inverawe. The old man's grandfather was sleeping with his son, then a lad, in the same room, but in another bed. This son, father of the narrator, "was awakened," to borrow the words of Mr. Campbell, "by some unaccustomed sound, and behold there was a bright light in the room, and he saw a figure, in full Highland regimentals, cross over the room and stoop down over his father's bed and give him a kiss. He was too frightened to speak, but put his head under his coverlet and went to sleep. Once more he was roused in like manner, and saw the same sight. In the morning he spoke to his father about it, who told him that it was Macdonnochie [the Gaelic patronymic of the laird of Inverawe] whom he had seen, and who came to tell him that he had been killed in a great battle in America. Sure enough, said my informant, it was on the very day that the battle of Ticonderoga was fought and the laird was killed."

It is also said that two ladies of the family of Inverawe saw a battle in the clouds, in which the shadowy forms of Highland warriors were plainly to be descried; and that when the fatal news came from America, it was found that the time of the vision answered exactly to that of the battle in which the head of the family fell.

The legend of Inverawe has within a few years found its way into an English magazine, and it has also been excellently told in the Atlantic Monthly of September of this year, 1884, by Miss O F Gordon Cumming. Her version differs a little from that given above from the recital of Dean Stanley and the present laird of Inverawe, but the essential points are the same. Miss Gordon Cumming, however, is in error when she says that Duncan Campbell was wounded in the breast, and that he was first buried at Ticonderoga. His burial-place was near Fort Edward, where he died, and where his remains still lie, though not at the same spot, as they were long after removed by a family named Gilchrist, who claimed kinship with the Campbells of Inverawe.

H.

CHAPTER XXV. WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

FORCE OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH AT THE SIEGE OF QUEBEC.

“LES retranchemens que j’avois fait tracer depuis la rivière St. Charles jusqu’au saut Montmorency furent occupés par plus de 14,000 hommes, 200 cavaliers dont je formai un corps aux ordres de M. de la Rochebeaucour, environ 1,000 sauvages Abenakis et des différentes nations du nord des pays d’en haut. M. de Boishébert arriva ensuite avec les Acadiens et sauvages qu’il avoit rassemblés. Je réglai la garnison de Québec à 2,000 hommes.” Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

The commissary Berniers says that the whole force was about fifteen thousand men, besides Indians, which is less than the number given by Vaudreuil.

Bigot says: “Nous avons 13,000 hommes et mille à 1,200 sauvages, sans compter 2,000 hommes de garnison dans la ville.” Bigot au Ministre, 25 Oct. 1759.

The Hartwell Journal du Siège says: “Il fut décidé qu’on ne laisseroit dans la place que 1,200 hommes, et que tout le reste marcheroit au camp, où l’on comptoit se trouver plus de 15,000 hommes, y compris les sauvages."

Rigaud, Vaudreuil's brother, writing from Montreal to Bourlamaque on the 23d of June, says: "Je compte que l'armée campée sous Québec sera de 17,000 hommes bien effectifs, sans les sauvages." He then gives a list of Indians who have joined the army, or are on the way, amounting to thirteen hundred.

At the end of June Wolfe had about eight thousand six hundred effective soldiers. Of these the ten battalions, commonly mentioned as regiments, supplied six thousand four hundred; detached grenadiers from Louisbourg, three hundred; artillery, three hundred, rangers, four hundred, light infantry, two hundred, marines, one thousand. The complement of the battalions was in some cases seven hundred and in others one thousand (Knox, ii. 25); but their actual strength varied from five hundred to eight hundred, except the Highlanders, who mustered eleven hundred, their ranks being more than full. Fraser, in his Journal of the Siege, gives a tabular view of the whole. At the end of the campaign Lévis reckons the remaining English troops at about six thousand (Lévis au Ministre, 10 Nov. 1759), which answers to the report of General Murray: "The troops will amount to six thousand" (Murray to Pitt, 12 Oct. 1759). The precise number is given in the Return of the State of His Majesty's Forces left in Garrison at Quebec, dated 12 Oct. 1759, and signed, Robert Monckton (Public Record Office, America and West Indies, xcix.). This shows the total of rank and file to have been 6,214, which the addition of officers, sergeants, and drummers raises to about seven thousand, besides 171 artillerymen.

I.

CHAPTER XXVII. THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

ONE of the most important unpublished documents on Wolfe's operations against Quebec is the long and elaborate Journal mémoratif de ce qui s'est passé de plus remarquable pendant qu'a duré le Siège de la Ville de Québec (Archives de la Marine). The writer, M. de Foligny, was a naval officer who during the siege commanded one of the principal batteries of the town. The official correspondence of Vaudreuil for 1759 (Archives Nationales) gives the events of the time from his point of view, and various manuscript letters of Bigot, Lévis, Montreuil, and others (Archives de la Marine, Archives de la Guerre) give additional particulars. The letters, generally private and confidential, written to Bourlamaque by Montcalm, Lévis, Vaudreuil, Malarctic, Berniers, and others during the siege contain much that is curious and interesting.

Siège de Québec en 1759, d'après un Manuscrit déposé à la Bibliothèque de Hartwell en Angleterre A very valuable diary, by a citizen of Quebec, it was brought from England in 1834 by the Hon. D. B. Viger, and a few copies were printed at Quebec in 1836 Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm. A minute diary of an officer under Montcalm (printed by the Quebec Historical Society). Mémoire sur la Campagne de 1759, par M. de Joannès, Major de Québec (Archives de la Guerre) Lettres et Dépêches de Montcalm (Ibid.). These touch chiefly the antecedents of the siege. Mémoires sur le Canada depuis 1749

jusqu'à 1760 (Quebec Historical Society). Journal du Siège de Québec en 1759, par M. Jean Claude Panet, notaire (Ibid.). The writer of this diary was in Quebec at the time. Several other journals and letters of persons present at the siege have been printed by the Quebec Historical Society, under the title Événements de la Guerre en Canada durant les Années 1759 et 1760. Relation de ce qui s'est passé au Siège de Québec, par une Religieuse de l'Hôpital Général de Québec (Quebec Historical Society). Jugement impartial sur les Opérations militaires de la Campagne, par M^r de Pontbriand, Évêque de Québec (Ibid.) Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec, from the Journal of a French Officer on board the Chezine Frigate, taken by His Majesty's Ship Rippon, by Richard Gardiner, Esq., Captain of Marines in the Rippon, London, 1761.

General Wolfe's Instructions to Young Officers, Philadelphia, 1778. This title is misleading, the book being a collection of military orders. General Orders in Wolfe's Army (Quebec Historical Society). This collection is much more full than the foregoing, so far as concerns the campaign of 1759. Letters of Wolfe (in Wright's Wolfe), Despatches of Wolfe, Saunders, Monckton, and Townshend (in contemporary magazines). A Short Authentic Account of the Expedition against Quebec, by a Volunteer upon that Expedition, Quebec, 1872. This valuable diary is ascribed to James Thompson, a volunteer under Wolfe, who died at Quebec in 1830 at the age of ninety-eight, after holding for many years the position of overseer of works in the Engineer Department. Another manuscript, for the most part identical with this, was found a few years ago among old papers in the office of the Royal Engineers at Quebec. Journal of the Expedition on the River St. Lawrence. Two entirely distinct diaries bear this name. One is printed in the New York Mercury for December, 1759; the other was found among the papers of George Alsopp, secretary to Sir Guy Carleton, who served under Wolfe (Quebec Historical Society). Johnstone, A Dialogue in Hades (Ibid.). The Scotch Jacobite, Chevalier Johnstone, as aide-de-camp to Lévis, and afterwards to Montcalm, had great opportunities of acquiring information during the campaign; and the results, though produced in the fanciful form of a dialogue between the ghosts of Wolfe and Montcalm, are of substantial historical value. The Dialogue is followed by a plain personal narrative. Fraser, Journal of the Siege of Quebec (Ibid.). Fraser was an officer in the Seventy-eighth Highlanders. Journal of the Siege of Quebec, by a Gentleman in an Eminent Station on the Spot, Dublin, 1759. Journal of the Particular Transactions during the Siege of Quebec (Notes and Queries, xx.). The writer was a soldier or non-commissioned officer, serving in the light infantry.

Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec and Total Reduction of Canada, by John Johnson, Clerk and Quarter-master Sergeant to the Fifty-eighth Regiment. A manuscript of 176 pages, written when Johnson was a pensioner at Chelsea (England). The handwriting is exceedingly neat and clear; and the style, though often grandiloquent, is creditable to a writer in his station. This curious production was found among the papers of Thomas McDonough, Esq., formerly British Consul at Boston, and is in possession of his grandson, my relative, George Francis Parkman, Esq., who, by inquiries at the Chelsea Hospital, learned that Johnson was still living in 1802.

I have read and collated with extreme care all the above authorities, with others which need not be mentioned.

Among several manuscript maps and plans showing the operations of the siege may be mentioned one entitled, Plan of the Town and Basin of Quebec and Part of the Adjacent Country, shewing the principal Encampments and Works of the British Army commanded by Major Gen^l Wolfe, and those of the French Army by Lieut. Gen^l the Marquis of Montcalm. It is the work of three engineers of Wolfe's army, and is on a scale of eight hundred feet to an inch. A facsimile from the original in possession of the Royal Engineers is before me.

Among the "King's Maps," British Museum (oxix 27), is a very large colored plan of operations at Quebec in 1759, 1760, superbly executed in minute detail.

J.

CHAPTER XXVIII. FALL OF QUEBEC.

Death and Burial of Montcalm. — Johnstone, who had every means of knowing the facts, says that Montcalm was carried after his wound to the house of the surgeon Ainoux. Yet it is not quite certain that he died there. According to Knox, his death took place at the General Hospital; according to the modern author of the Ursulines de Québec, at the Château St.-Louis. But the General Hospital was a mile out of the town, and in momentary danger of capture by the English, while the Château had been made untenable by the batteries of Point Lévi, being immediately exposed to their fire. Neither of these places was one to which the dying general was likely to be removed, and it is probable that he was suffered to die in peace at the house of the surgeon.

It has been said that the story of the burial of Montcalm in a grave partially formed by the explosion of a bomb, rests only on the assertion in his epitaph, composed in 1761 by the Academy of Inscriptions at the instance of Bougainville. There is, however, other evidence of the fact. The naval captain Foligny, writing on the spot at the time of the burial, says in his Diary, under date of September 14. "A huit heures du soir, dans l'église des Ursulines, fut enterré dans une fosse faite sous la chaire par le travail de la Bombe, M. le Marquis de Montcalm, décédé du matin à 4 heures après avoir reçu tous les Sacrements. Jamais Général n'avoit été plus aimé de sa troupe et plus universellement regretté. Il étoit d'un esprit supérieur, doux, gracieux, affable, familier à tout le monde, ce qui lui avoit fait gagner la confiance de toute la Colonie : requiescat in pace."

The author of Les Ursulines de Québec says: "Un des projectiles ayant fait une large ouverture dans le plancher de bas, on en profita pour creuser la fosse du général."

The Boston Post Boy and Advertiser, in its issue of Dec. 3, 1759, contains a letter from "an officer of distinction" at Quebec to Messrs. Green and Russell, proprietors of the newspaper. This letter contains the following words "He [Montcalm] died the next day; and, with a little Improvement, one of our 13-inch Shell-Holes served him for a Grave."

The particulars of his burial are from the Acte Mortuaire du Marquis de Montcalm in the registers of the Church of Notre Dame de Québec, and from that valuable chronicle, Les Ursulines de Québec, composed by the Superior of the convent. A nun of the sisterhood, Mère Aimable Dubé de Saint-Ignace, was, when a child, a witness of the scene, and preserved a vivid memory of it to the age of eighty-one.

K.

CHAPTER XXIX. SAINTE-FOY.

STRENGTH OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH AT THE BATTLE OF STE.-FOY.

IN the Public Record Office (America and West Indies, xcix.) are preserved the tabular returns of the garrison of Quebec for 1759, 1760, sent by Murray to the War Office. They show the exact condition of each regiment, in all ranks, for every month of the autumn, winter, and spring. The return made out on the 24th of April, four days before the battle, shows that the total number of rank and file, exclusive of non-commissioned officers and drummers, was 6,808, of whom 2,612 were fit for duty in Quebec, and 654 at other places in Canada; that is, at Ste.-Foy, Old Lorette, and the other outposts. This gives a total of 3,266 rank and file fit for duty at or near Quebec; besides which there were between one hundred and two hundred artillerymen, and a company of rangers. This was Murray's whole available force at the time. Of the rest of the 6,808 who appear in the return, 2,299 were invalids at Quebec, and 669 in New York; 538 were on service in Halifax and New York, and 36 were absent on furlough. These figures nearly answer to the condensed statement of Fraser, and confirm the various English statements of the numbers that took part in the battle ; namely, 3,140 (Knox), 3,000 (John Johnson), 3,111, and elsewhere, in round numbers, 3,000 (Murray). Lévis, with natural exaggeration, says 4,000. Three or four hundred were left in Quebec to guard the walls when the rest marched out.

I have been thus particular because a Canadian writer, Garneau, says . “Murray sortit de la ville le 28 au matin à la tête de toute la garnison, dont les seules troupes de la ligne comptaient encore 7,714 combattants, non compris les officiers.” To prove this, he cites the pay-roll of the garrison ; which, in fact, corresponds to the returns of the same date, if non-commissioned officers, drummers, and artillerymen are counted with the rank and file. But Garneau falls into a double error. He assumes, first, that there were no men on the sick list ; and secondly, that there were none absent from Quebec ; when in reality, as the returns show, considerably more than half were in one or the other of these categories. The pay-rolls were made out at the headquarters of each corps, and always included the entire number of men enlisted in it, whether sick or well, present or absent. On the same fallacious premises Garneau affirms that Wolfe, at the battle on the Plains of Abraham, had eight thousand soldiers, or a little less than double his actual force.

Having stated, as above, that Murray marched out of Quebec with at least 7,714 effective troops, Garneau, not very consistently, goes on to say that he advanced against Lévis with six thousand or seven thousand men ; and he adds that the two armies were about equal, because Lévis had left some detachments behind to guard his boats and artillery. The number of the French, after they had all reached the field, was, in truth, about seven thousand ; at the beginning of the fight it seems not to have exceeded five thousand. The Relation de la seconde Bataille de Québec says : "Notre petite armée consistoit au moment de l'action en 3,000 hommes de troupes réglées et 2,000 Canadiens ou sauvages." A large number of Canadians came up from Sillery while the affair went on; and as the whole French army, except the detachments mentioned by Garneau, had passed the night at no greater distance from the field than Ste.-Foy and Sillery, the last man must have reached it before the firing was half over.

INDEX.

INDEX.

ABENAKIS, the, i 26, in the Ohio valley, i 43, join the French against the English, i 159, at Quebec, iii 285

Abenakis Christians, the, ii 198.

Abenakis of Batiscan, the, ii 58

Abenakis of Becancour, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174

Abenakis of Missisqui, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.

Abenakis of Panaouski, the, held responsible for the signal of butchery at Fort William Henry, ii 203

Abenakis of the Penobscot, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.

Abenakis of St Francis, the, at Fort Duquesne, i 216, ii 58, 168; at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174, Amherst sends an embassy to, iii 93; Rogers sent to punish, iii 93, 95, description of, iii 96

Abercrombie, General James, sent to America, ii 70, letter from Shirley to, ii 81, on Bradstreet's Fight, ii 89, at Albany, ii 86, correspondence of, ii 88; causes ruinous delay in taking control of the troops, ii 107, his letter of thanks to the rangers, ii 133; succeeds Loudon, ii 253; Amherst unable to co-operate with, ii 281, rejoices over the fall of Louisbourg, ii 282, reinforced by Amherst, ii 285, 286, Massachusetts raises men for, ii 291, gathers his forces to march against Ticonderoga, ii 292, his camp at Lake George, ii 294, little more than nominal commander, ii 295, estimates of, ii 295, his advance, ii 299, his loss in the death of Howe, ii 304, reaches the Falls, ii 305, 306, describes the defences at Ticonderoga, ii 307, a missed opportunity, ii 309, his blunders, ii 309, assaults Ticonderoga, ii 311, 312, 313, his retreat, ii 316, his losses, ii 317, his poltroonery after the battle, ii 321; indignation at, ii 322, Cleveland's interview with, ii 324; his force diminished, ii 328, ii 331; learns that Fort Frontenac had passed into British hands, ii 334, consents to Bradstreet's expedition, ii 335, joined by Amherst at Lake George, ii 337; breaks camp, ii 337, ii 366, in 4, 5, 80, 82, on the losses at Ticonderoga, ii 280, 281

Abercrombie, James (nephew), letter from Dinwiddie to, i 171;

- on the conduct of the rangers, ii. 133.
- Abraham, brother of Chief Hendrick, at the Albany convention, i. 181.
- Abraham, the Heights of, Wolfe's plan to climb, iii. 125, Wolfe's ascent of, iii. 130, 131, the line of battle, iii. 133; iii. 287
- Abraham, Maitre, iii. 132.
- Abraham, the Plains of, iii. 41, 103, 119, 128, description of, iii. 132, iii. 136, 141, 148, 149, 172, 203, 293
- Academy of Inscriptions, the, iii. 291
- Acadia, population of, i. 23, the French of, i. 31, melancholy interest in the conflict in, i. 94, conquered by General Nicholson, i. 94; transferred by France to England, i. 95, English power in, i. 96, the French never reconciled to the loss of, i. 97, mildness of British rule in, i. 100, French and English interpretations of the boundaries of, i. 128, 129; as defined by the commission of De Monts, i. 128; Shirley's project to purge French influence from, i. 243; condition of, i. 244, its possession necessary to the French, i. 246, harbors of, i. 246; all in British hands, i. 262; expulsion of the Acadians from, i. 281-295; lost past hope to England, ii. 14, iii. 18; France renounces her claims to, iii. 251.
- Acadian clergy, the, see Acadian priests.
- Acadian enterprise, the, Monckton in command of, i. 201.
- Acadian priests, the, i. 98; use their influence to prevent the Acadians from taking the oath of allegiance, i. 110, Le Loutre's masterful dealings with, i. 119; necessary to the Acadians, i. 269; always the agent of a double-headed foreign power, i. 269; the cause of the misery of the Acadians, i. 275
- Acadians, the, swear fidelity to England, i. 95; work of the French priests among, i. 96; number of, i. 98, the six principal parishes of, i. 98; priests of, i. 98, well used by the English, i. 99; enjoyed liberty of religion, i. 100; their hostilities against the English, i. 101, further oaths of allegiance required of, i. 101; send deputies to Halifax, i. 101; refuse to take the required oath, i. 102, encouraged by the French to seek asylum on French soil, i. 103, evil advisers, i. 105, kept by Le Loutre in allegiance to King Louis, i. 109, emigration to French territory of, i. 118; their misery, i. 114, forbearance of Cornwallis towards, i. 115, Hopson's considerate treatment of, i. 117, Le Loutre a despot towards, i. 118; the first forcible removal of, i. 121; Le Loutre's harshness to, i. 125, La Jonquière commands them to take the oath of allegiance to France, i. 126, ground between the two powers, i. 126; complaints of, i. 127, threatened by Le Loutre, i. 127, 244; total emigration of, i. 244; position of, i. 245-247; Le Loutre claims to have led them from the land of bondage, i. 252; deplorable condition of, i. 252; threatened by

Le Loutre, i 253; send deputies to Duquesne, i 254, their reception, i 254, heartlessness of the dealings of the French with, i 254, remain in fear and vacillation, i 254, a ceaseless annoyance and menace to the English, i 254, Monckton determines to remove, i 263, ordered to meet Monckton at Beausejour, i 264, Monckton's conditions, i 264-266, motives of Monckton's stern sentence upon, i 265, relations of the Bishop of Quebec with, i 263, an enemy in the heart of the province, i 267, an ideal picture of, i 268, their manner of living, i 268, their dwellings, i 268; a litigious race, i 269, their need of the curé, i 269, Lawrence exacts an unqualified oath of allegiance from, i 270, present a memorial to the governor, i 271; reply to, i 271, 272; refuse to take the oath, i 273, Lawrence determined to reduce them to compliance, i 273, motives of their conduct, i 275, the priests the cause of the misery of, i 275, Monckton ordered to seize, i 276, Winslow issues a summons to, i 281, the scene in the church, i 282, 283, declared prisoners of the King, i 284, taken on board ship, i 287; the embarkation, i 289; Winslow's humane treatment of, i 290, the number transported, i 290, conjugal devotion of, i 291, their strength broken, i 292; disposition of, i 292, their fate, i 293, first the tools, then the victims of the government of Louis XV, i 295, at Louisbourg, ii 271, iii 9, 21, English treatment of, iii 265; to join the Indians against the English, iii 267

Adams, Captain, i 259, at Fort Cumberland, i 277; at Fort Edward, i 280 282, i 287, 291.

Adams, a wagoner, at Fort Lyman, i 307; death of, i 310

"Adams, Parson," i 9.

Adirondacks, the, ii 141

Adolphus, iii 242, on Granville's reply to Pitt, iii 244

Africa, coasts of, convulsed by the war between England and France, ii 39, British victories in, ii 253, iii 247

Aigues Mortes, pestiferous dungeons of, i 24

Aix-la-Chapelle, Peace of, i 11, 22, 39, does nothing to settle the vexed question of boundaries, i 40, i 47, 99, 127, ii 46, 258, iii 252.

Akin, Mr, on the Acadian oath and its history, i 275

Alais, ii 144

Albany, fortified town of, i 31, 36, 65, 69; Indian commissioners at, i 179, convention at, i 179, i 203, 241, Johnson encamped near, i 300, i 309, Shirley at, ii 4; an outpost of civilization, ii 4, Anne MacVicar's recollections of, ii 4, other aspects of, ii 5, fur-trade at, ii 5; the principal base of military operations on the continent, ii 5, Shirley returns to, ii 12; Shirley's headquarters, ii 71, the New England troops muster at, ii 71, ii 81; Bradstreet at, ii 83; Abercrombie and Webb at, ii 86, Loudon reaches, ii 87, the French plan to seize, ii 102, ii 108, 185, 206, 297, 299, 304, 336.

- Albany Dutch traders, the, see Dutch of Albany, the.
- Albany plan of union, the, i 182
- Albany traders, the,ascalcity of, i 298
- Albemaile, Lord, British minister at Versailles, i 110, titular governor of Virginia, i 142, letters from Dinwiddie to, i 184, iii 269, Chesterfield's estimate of, i 187, death of, i 191, sails against Havana, iii 248, captures Havana, iii 248
- "Alcide," the, commanded by Captain Hocquait, i 192, at tacked and captured by the "Dunkirk," i 192, 193.
- Alembert, D', i 18
- Alequippa, Queen, of the Iroquois, i. 49, at the Great Meadows, i 157
- Alexander the Great, iii 255
- Alexandria, Fry at, i. 148, the King's companies at, i 168, Braddock at, i 198, the council of the provincial governors at, i 199, 200, i 243, 256, 297.
- Algonquins, the, at Fort Frontenac, i 78, join the French against the English, i 159
- Algonquins of Three Rivers, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
- Algonquins of the Two Mountains, the, ii 58, at Montcalm's grand council, ii. 174
- Alleghanies, the, i 22, 23, 43, 45, 130, 132, 150, 153, 167, 176, ii 21, 58, 337, 341, 346, 349.
- Alleghany, the main, i 213; ii 350, 361, 362, 367
- Alleghany River, the, i 42, Bienville at, i. 46, 133, 186; Washington on, i 141; i. 148, 231; ii. 110, 111.
- Allen, Chief Justice, letter from Bouquet to, ii 370
- Allen, Ensign, of Halket's regiment, i 208
- Allies, the, take Berlin, iii 235
- Alsopp, George, iii 289
- America, owes much to the imbecility of Louis XV, i 5, French claims in, i 22, convulsed by the war between England and France, ii 39, rising French colonies in, ii 42
- American boundaries, the question of, i 128-132
- American squadron, the, Commodore Keppel in command of, i 194
- American States, the, owe a debt of gratitude to Shuley and Dinwiddie, i 201
- Amheist, General Jeffrey, placed in command of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 253, sails for Halifax, ii 256, joins Boscawen at Halifax, ii 261, reconnoitres at Louisbourg, ii. 262; makes a landing, ii 266, camp of, ii 266, exchanges courtesies with Drucour, ii 270, ii 275, Drucour asks for terms, ii 276, negotiations, ii 277-280; Drucour accepts the articles of capitulation, ii 280; enters Louisbourg, ii. 281; his courtesies to Madame Drucour, ii 281, unable to co-operate with Abercrombie, ii. 281, his correspondence with Wolfe, ii 285, 286, reinforces Abercrombie, ii 286, Drucour's correspondence with, ii 287, joins Abercrombie at Lake George, ii 337; learns of Forbes' success, ii 370; iii 34, 35; to attack Ticonderoga, iii 38, 51, 64, iii 54, resolves to capture

- Niagara, iii 77, prepares to lead the grand central attack against Ticonderoga, Crown Point, and Montreal, iii 78, at Lake George, iii 78, his force, iii 78, his advance, iii 79, builds Fort George, iii 79, takes possession of Crown Point, iii 82, his delay in reinforcing Wolfe, iii 82, 83, builds a new fort at Crown Point, iii 83, builds other forts, iii 83, iii 91, his advance into Canada, iii 93; sends an embassy to the Abenakis, iii 93, returns to Crown Point, iii 94, his mistakes, iii 95, his instructions to Rogers, iii 96, sends aid to Rogers, iii 99, iii 103, 115, 168, 177, 185, 204; plans a triple attack on Canada, iii 207, 212; gathers his army at Oswego, iii 215, at La Présentation, iii 215, captures Fort Lévis, iii 216, on the capture of Fort Lévis, iii 216, the descent of the rapids, iii 217, lands at La Chine, iii 217, Vaudreuil offers to capitulate, iii 219, negotiations, iii 219, inexorable in his demands, iii 219, Vaudreuil yields, iii 220, the terms of capitulation, iii 220, iii 223, 224.
- Amherst, Lieutenant-Colonel (brother of the general), iii 82, retakes St John's, iii 249
- Amherst's regiment, at Quebec, iii 73
- Amonocuc, iii 99
- Anastase, the Huron chief, i 216
- Anbury, the traveller, iii 273
- Anglican Church, the, in New York, i 35
- Anglicans, the, i 31
- Annapolis, perplexity of English commanders at, i 95, feeble garrison, i 96, 97, i 98, 110, 113, General Ligonier urges the defence of, i 184, English fort at, i 247, i 250, Shirley's force reaches, i 256, i 273, Major Handfield in command at, i 276, i 289
- Annapolis River, the, i 244, 247, 268
- Annapolis Royal, i 250.
- Anne, Fort, ii 329
- Anse du Foulon, iii 119, 121, 128, 130, 139, 189, 192, 199
- Anson, the celebrated navigator, i 186, first Lord of the Admiralty, ii 255
- Anthonay, Lieutenant-Colonel D', at Louisbourg, ii 277, 279
- "Apollon," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259
- "Apostle of the Iroquois," the, see Piquet, Abbe
- Appleton, Nathaniel, rejoices over the fall of Canada, iii 226
- Apthorp, the Boston merchant, i 254
- Arbois, iii 275
- Arbuthnot, Captain William, on the Indian butchery at Fort William Henry, ii 194
- Arcadia, i 268
- Archibald, Sergeant James, ii 109.
- "Aréthuse," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259, perilous position of, ii 268, ii 269, 270, sent to France, ii 271
- Argenson, D', French minister of war, disregards Madame de Pompadour, i 17, i 229, ii 41, appoints Montcalm general to replace Dieskau, ii 42, 46, ii 249
- Argens, D', letters from Frederic of Prussia to, iii 234, 235.

- Armstrong, Colonel John, sent to attack Kittanning, ii 110, the attack, ii 111, 112, wounded, ii 112, his prisoners, ii 113, his report to Governor Denny, ii 113, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 367
- Arnouville, Machault d', at the head of the Marine and Colonial Department, i 186
- Aronau, Surgeon, iii 152, 290
- Arthur's Club, i 9
- Artillery Cove, ii 187
- Atons, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i 189, at Louisbourg, ii 54, ii 259, 279, uniform of, ii 55.
- Ashley, Dr, ii 327.
- Ashley, John, writes to Governor Phips, ii 74
- Asia, i 5, iii 247.
- Atlantic coast, the, i 22
- "Atlantic Monthly," iii 284
- Attique, Delaware village of, Bienville at, i 48 See also Kittanning
- Aubry, summoned to Pouchot's aid, iii 87; responds, iii 88; defeated by Johnson, iii 90; captured by the English, iii 90
- Augsburg, Congress at, proposed by Choiseul, iii 241
- Augusta, Fort, post at, ii 356
- "Auguste," the, wreck of, iii 230, 231
- Augustus the Strong, King of Poland, i 12.
- Aulac, i 263, 264.
- Austria, the House of, power of, i 19, i 21.
- Austria, Louis XV allies himself to, i 4; France is made the instrument of, ii 40; joins Russia and France against Prussia, ii 41, 243, supremely Catholic, ii 41; in 246; signs the treaty of Hubertsburg, iii 254
- Austrians, the, defeated in the battle of Prague, ii 244, take Silesia away from Frederic of Prussia, ii 245; defeated by Frederic of Prussia at Leuthen, ii 215, flee before Frederic of Prussia, iii 233
- Austrian Succession, War of, the, i 22.
- Auxennois, the, regiment of, Montcalm made colonel of, ii 45
- Avery, Ensign, in Rogers' expedition, iii 97, 99.
- Avon River, the, i 278. See also Pisiquid River, the.
- BABIOLE, Madame de Pompadour's summer house, ii 40, conference at, ii 40
- Baby, a Canadian officer, ii 15
- Bagley, Colonel Jonathan, in command at Fort William Henry, ii 76
- Bagley's Massachusetts regiment, ii 282, 322
- Baker, in the attack on Kittanning, ii 111
- Bald Mountain, see Rogers Rock
- Barachois, the, at Louisbourg, ii 268, 269, 270, 272
- Barbadoes, the, iii 80
- Barnsley, Thomas, ii 331
- Barré, Major, ii 251; at Quebec, iii 111.
- Barrington, Viscount, ii 307, made Chancellor of the Exchequer, iii 239, iii 244, 281.
- Bartman, Captain, aide de-camp to Webb, ii 191
- Basin of Mines, the, i 98, 247, 270, 274, 276, 277, 279, 287.
- Bassignac, De, ii 313
- Bastille, the, i 17; ii 241; iii 231.

- Bath, gaming at, i 9, 195, Die-kau at, i 322, iii 29, 30
- Bath, Lady, i 196
- Bath, Lord, in favor of retaining Canada, iii 251.
- Batiscan, ii 58, iii 177.
- Bavaria, i 21
- Bavaria, Elector of, i 21, France supports the claims of, i 21
- "Bawle," ii 40
- Baye Verte, Le Loutre flees to, i 261, Fort Gaspereau at, i 262,
i 263, 264
- Béarn, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i 189, ii 55; uniform of, ii 55, ii 60, encamped before Fort Niagara, ii 62, in the expedition against Oswego, ii.
96, at Ticonderoga, ii 165, 310,
315; in Montcalm's expedition, ii 180; at Montreal, ii 213; at Quebec, iii 72, 135 146, iii 194
- Beatson, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161, on the arrogance of Pitt, iii 241; on Pitt's plan to humble
the House of Bourbons, iii 243, on the capture of Havana, iii.
248
- Beaubassin, i 98, occupied by the English, i 120, description of,
i 120, Major Lawrence lands at, i 121, burned by Le Loutre,
i 121.
- Beaubassin, Madame de, ii 146.
- Beauchamp, a merchant, i 281
- Beancour, La Roche, ii. 146, iii
275, 285
- Beauharnois, on the dwellings of the Acadians, i 268
- Beaujeu, Captain, at Fort Duquesne, i 216, 218, 219, 220, death of, i 223, iii 270, 271, 272
- Beauport, the heights of, iii. 54
- Beauport, the parish of, iii 42 43,
53, 55, 66, 67, 70, 72, 106, 107,
110, 117, 125, 132, 134, 136, 137,
142, 145, 147, 149, 151, 154, 155,
156, 158
- Beauport River, the, iii. 42, 50, 72, 118
- Beauséjour, Fort, built by the French, i 125, attack planned upon, i 199, 200, Monckton ordered to capture, i 203, the strongest place in Acadia, i 248, a continual menace to the English, i 248, Lawrence and Shirley plan against, i 249, garrison of, i. 250, location of,
i 250, 251, commanded by Vergor, i. 251, a plague-spot of official corruption, i 251, Le Loutre at, i 252, Thomas Pichon at, i 252, Monckton before, i 257, numbers of the French force in, i 257, attacked by the English, i 258, little promise of a strong defence within, i 259, surrenders to the English, i 260, terms of capitulation, i. 260, confusion at, i 261, becomes Fort Cumberland,
i 263 See also *Cumberland,
Fort*
- Beauséjour, the hill of, i 120;
Boishébert and La Corne at, i 120, i. 123, the French build a fort on, i 125; the Acadians at, i 127, 244; i 248, Shirley's expedition at, i 256, i 263, Monckton orders the Acadians to meet him at, i. 264, i 276,
iii 21, 33
- Beaussier, on the siege of Louis-bourg, ii 287
- Beaver Creek, ii 353
- Becancour, M de, receives Father
Piquet at Fort Niagara, i. 75.

- Bedford, Duke of, letter from Governor Clinton to, i 65, iii 239, sent as envoy to Paris, iii 249
- Bedford, Fort, built by Bouquet, ii 349.
- Bedford, town of, ii. 341
- Belcher, Governor, of New Jersey, declares war against the Delawares and Shawanoes, ii 80
- Belêtre, at Fort Frontenac, i 78, sent by Vaudreuil to attack German Flats, ii 209, exaggerated reports of his campaign, ii 210
- Belknap, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 199
- Bellamy, George Anne, the actress, experience of Braddock with, i 197
- "Bellaston, Lady," i 9
- Belleisle, iii 230, seized by the English, iii 247, restored to France, iii 252
- Belleisle, Maréchal de, minister of war, ii 211, 220, Montcalm reveals Bigot to, ii. 239; his letter to Montcalm, iii 16, 17; Montcalm's reply, iii 17
- Bengal, iii. 252
- Bennington, John Stark the hero of, i 302
- Benott, ii 232
- Berkeley, Sir William, opposition to free education of, i. 32
- Berks (Penn), ii 33
- Beilin, taken by the Allies, iii. 235.
- Bernard, Governor, of Massachusetts, proclaims a day of thanksgiving for the fall of Canada, iii. 223.
- Bernès, at Ticonderoga, ii 305
- Bernetz, iii 92.
- Berniers, the commissary, on the elation of the French over the repulse of the English at Montmorenci, iii 102, on Quebec after the siege, iii 173, on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 218, on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii. 285, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287
- Bernis, Abbé de, Minister of Foreign Affairs, iii 239, loses the favor of Madame de Pompadour, iii 239, supplanted by Choiseul, iii 239, 240
- Berryer, rebukes Bigot, ii 237, 238, gives Montcalm power over Vaudreuil and Bigot, ii 240; Bougainville's interview with, iii 14; refuses aid to Canada, iii 15, iii 170
- Berry's battalion, at Ticonderoga, ii 294, 305, 306, 310, 311
- "Biche," the, at Louisbourg, ii. 259
- Biddle, Edward, on the Indian massacres, ii 30
- "Bionfaisant," the at Louisbourg, ii 259, 272; captured by the English, ii 274
- Bienville, Celoron de, sent into the valley of the Ohio, i 40; at the mouth of the Oswegatchie, i 41, 56, reaches Niagara, i 41; the expedition, i 41, 42, at the Alleghany, i. 46; takes possession of the country for France, i. 46, 47, at Attiqué, i 48, his letter to Governor Hamilton, i 48, journal of, i 48, 51, 55, 56, 66, at Logstown, i 49; addresses the Indians, i. 50, at Wheeling Creek, i 51; buries plates, i 51, at Scioto, i 52; ascends the Miami, i. 53, bids farewell to the Ohio, i. 54, among the Mi-

- amis, i 54, his interview with La Demoiselle, i 54, on Lake Erie, i 55, at Fort Frontenac, i 55; at Montreal, i 55, 56, visits the Abbé Piquet, i 56, leaden plates of, i 66, in command at Detroit, i 81, characteristics of, i 81, ordered to attack Pickawillany, i 86, La Jonquière complains against, i 86, i 89, 133
- Bigot, François, the intendant, i 69, Father Piquet's letter to, i 71, on Toronto, i 74, i 81, 82; the centre of official corruption, i 85; on the death of La Jonquière, i 86; intrigues of, i 92, assists the Acadians in resisting the English, i 105, encourages the Indians against the English, i 107, letter from Varin to, i 165, i 219, on the defeat of Biaddock, i 229, Vergor a confederate of, i 251, sails for Europe, i 251, defends Vergor in the court-martial, i 263, on Dieskau, i 300, his account of the battle of Lake George, i 328, on the French force at Forts Frontenac and Niagara, ii 10, on the troupes de la marine, ii 56; on the destruction of Fort Bull, ii 62, at Montreal, ii 63, the most accomplished knave in Canada, ii 63, on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, on the destruction of Kittanning, ii 114, ii 150, 154; on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 202, on cannibalism among the Indians, ii 208, the centre of manifold corruption, ii 221, perfect harmony between Vaudreuil and, ii 222, his early life, ii 222, a party of pleasure, ii 223-225; his official residence, ii 225, his country-house, ii 225, 226, makes Cadet commissary-general, ii 226, his official knavery, ii 227-232, becomes the accepted lover of Madame Péan, ii 232, Varin aspires to supplant him in the intendency, ii 234, defended by Vaudreuil, ii 235, issues promissory notes, ii 236, becoming a victim to the incapacity of his confederates, ii 237, ministerial rebukes, ii 237-239, his knavery revealed to the ministry by Montcalm, ii 239, Montcalm given powers over, ii 240, his thieving completely exposed, ii 241; breaks with Cadet, ii 241; documents of the trial of, ii 241, ii 360, figures as peace-maker between Montcalm and Vaudreuil, iii 6, Vaudreuil's eulogy of, iii 38, at Quebec, iii 43; lives in luxury, iii 44, iii 60, on Wolfe's desperate plan, iii 116, saves Vergor from disgrace, iii 122, on the force of the English and French at the battle of Quebec, iii 142, iii 147, on Bougainville's force, iii 149, assists Levis, iii 158, iii 164, 167, on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 215; arrested, iii 231, his trial, iii 232, his sentence, iii 232, receives instructions for the destruction of Oswego, iii 264, on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii 285; on the battle of Quebec, iii 287.
- Bille, ii 327
- Bingham, Mr, i 236
- Bishop's Palace, the, at Quebec, iii 172.

- "Bizarre," the, at Louisbourg, i 259
- Blackhenth, iii 29
- Black Hole of Calcutta, the, ii 251.
- Black Hunter, the, see Jack, Captain
- Black Mountain, ii 117.
- Black Point, ii 258
- Black Rifle, the, see Jack, Captain
- Black Watch Regiment, the, iii 283
- Blanchard, Colonel, on the New Hampshire regiment, i 301, at Fort Lyman, i 305, Johnson sends warning to, i 307
- Blodget, Samuel, on Johnson's army, i 312, on the battle of Lake George, i 317, 318, 328
- Blomedon, Cape, i 278, 279
- Bloody Pond, i 320
- "Bloody morning scout," the, i. 315.
- Blue Ridge, the, ii. 16
- Board of Trade and Plantation, the, Halifax at the head of, i. 186
- Bohemian campaign, the, Montcalm in, ii 45
- Bois, Abbe, iii 37, 153.
- Boishebert, encourages the Acadians to seek asylum on French soil, i 103, letter from La Jonquière to, i 104, sent with troops to Beauséjour, i 120; on the cause of the misery of the Acadians, i. 275; attacks Major Frye, i 286, trial of, ii 241; iii. 9; at Louisbourg, ii 271, in 285
- Bollan, agent of Massachusetts, ii. 292.
- Bolling, on the death of Braddock, i 234.
- Bolton, village of, ii 180
- Bonaventure, county of, i. 131
- Bonaventure, governor of Isle St Jean, on the Acadian emigration, i 114, on the misery of the Acadians, i 114
- Bond, i 236
- Bonnocamp, Father, chaplain of Bienville's expedition, i 42, his journal, i 42, 48, 54, 66; on the Indians, i 55, a Jesuit and a great mathematician, i 56; on Detroit, i 80, his estimate of Bienville, i 81
- Bonnechose, on Montcalm, ii 46.
- Bordeaux, ii 145, 227, 228
- Bordeaux, the Parliament of, ii. 222
- Border settlements, the, Dumas sets on the western tribes to attack, ii 14, horrors of the attacks on, ii. 15, 16
- Bordeaux, the, petition the Pennsylvania Assembly for protection from the Indians, ii 25, 28; help refused, ii 31.
- Boscawen, Admiral Edward, ordered to intercept the French expedition for Canada, i 191; failure of his expedition, i 192; on the losses of the English, i. 193, sent to Louisbourg, ii 254; sails for Halifax, ii 256, at Halifax, ii 261, sails into Gabarus Bay, ii 262, his determination to land at Louisbourg, ii 262; Drucour asks for terms, ii 276; negotiations, ii 277-280, Drucour accepts the articles of capitulation, ii 280, Drucour's correspondence with, ii 287
- Boston, the "General Court" at, i 28, i 34; Monckton at, i. 248, 254; Shurley's regiment mustered at, i 255, i. 276, 286, British troops assigned to, ii. 127; rejoices over the fall of

- Louisbourg, ii 282; taxes in, ii 291, iii 52.
- "Boston Evening Post," i 258; on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139, on Lord Howe, ii 297, ii 326, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 338, on Grant's defeat, ii 363, iii 85, on the capture of Niagara, iii 91; on the sufferings of Rogers's rangers, iii 101, on Stevens, iii 121
- "Boston Gazette," on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173, ii 334, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 337
- "Boston News Letter," i 258, on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139, on Howe, ii 297, ii 298, 300, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 338, on Grant's defeat, ii 363, 364, on the siege of Niagara, iii 87
- "Boston Post Boy," on Stevens, iii 121
- "Boston Post Boy and Advertiser," on the burial of Montcalm, iii 291
- "Boston Weekly Advertiser," on Grant's defeat, ii 363
- Botwood, Sergeant Edward, killed at Quebec, iii 75; the author of "Hot Stuff," iii 75, 76.
- Bougainville, the celebrated navigator, i 293, on the sufferings of the Acadians, i. 293, Montcalm's aide-de-camp, ii 47, Montcalm's fondness for, ii 49, sketch of, ii 49, sails for New France, ii 50; his journal, ii 50, on the Canadian militia, ii 57, at Montreal, ii 63; on Bradstreet's Fight, ii 84; on the sanitary condition of Villiers' camp, ii 90, ii 95, in the attack on Oswego, ii 100, on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, ii 109, on the destruction of Kittanning, ii 114, joins a war-party, ii 117, on Indian caprice, ii 117, on Indian cruelty, ii 118; on the perplexity of the French, ii 125, on Indian divinations, ii 125, 126, on the defeat of the rangers, ii 133, on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139, at Montreal, ii 142-144, on the rivalry between Montcalm and Vaudreuil, ii 153, on the strength of La Motte's fleet, ii 161, among the Mission Indians, ii 164, on the western Indian nations, ii 166, 167, on cannibalism among the Indians, ii 171, on the capture of Colonel Parker's force by the Indians, ii 172, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173, on Marin's dash at Fort Edward, ii 173, on Montcalm's grand council, ii 177, on Montcalm and the Indians before Fort William Henry, ii 189, sent by Montcalm to Fort William Henry, ii 192, on the efforts made by Montcalm to restrain the Indians from butchery, ii 195, 196, sent to Montreal, ii 196; on the indifference of the Canadian officers, ii 198, journal of, ii 202, on the responsibility for the signal of butchery, ii 203, brings Vaudreuil news of the success on Lake George, ii 207; on the treatment of prisoners by the Indians, ii 207; on Belêtre's

- campaign, ii. 210, on the inhumanity of the Indians, ii. 214; his account of Rogers's fight, ii. 220, on the official knavery at Montcalm, ii. 230, 231, on the maladministration of Canada, ii. 241, on Vaudreuil's plan to save Ticonderoga, ii. 292, slightly wounded at Ticonderoga, ii. 317, on the Hurons of Lorette, ii. 353, sent to make an appeal at court, iii. 12, at Versailles, iii. 13, made colonel and Chevalier of St Louis, iii. 14, his interview with Berryer, iii. 14, presents four memorials, iii. 14, negotiates a matrimonial treaty, iii. 15, 16, returns to Canada, ii. 16, his letters to Madame de Saint-Véran, iii. 16; iii. 18, 19, letters of, iii. 20, brings news of the English fleet against Quebec, iii. 38, 39, on the strength of the fortices of Quebec, iii. 51; sent against Murray, iii. 106; increase of his force, iii. 119, headquarters of, iii. 120; deceived by Wolfe, iii. 122, 126; relaxes his watchfulness, iii. 128, iii. 133; in the battle of Quebec, iii. 142; on the French reverses, iii. 148, his force, iii. 149, iii. 150, letter from Lévis to, iii. 158; at Isle-aux-Noix, iii. 207, 213; attacked by the English, iii. 214; abandons the island, iii. 214; crosses to Montreal, iii. 218, negotiates with Amherst for capitulation, iii. 219, iii. 279, provides an epitaph for Montcalm, iii. 291
- Bouquet, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry, ii. 127, 331; in the Royal American regiment, ii. 341; in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii. 341; at Raystown, ii. 341, 343; letters from Forbes to, ii. 343, 344, 345, 346, 348, 351, 363, 365, 366, builds Fort Bedford, ii. 349, consents to Grant's expedition, ii. 359, on Grant's defeat, ii. 362, 363, ii. 364, on the capture of Fort Duquesne, ii. 370
- Bouquet and Haldimand Papers, the, ii. 348, 372; iii. 280.
- Bourbon, the House of, holds the three thrones of France, Spain, and Naples, i. 12, triumph of, i. 12; claims the Ohio valley, i. 44, i. 81, effort to unite the members of, iii. 242; Pitt's plan for humbling, iii. 243, 255
- Bourbon, Island of, owned by France, i. 12.
- Boulogne, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i. 189, at Louisbourg, ii. 55, 259; uniform of, ii. 55.
- Bourlamaque, Chevalier de, named third in command to Montcalm, ii. 46, at Brest, ii. 50, in Canada, ii. 59; letters from Montcalm to, i. viii, ii. 142, 143, 145, 146, 147, 154, 211, 212, 214, iii. 8, 54, 118, 275, at Ticonderoga, ii. 165, 294, 302, 305, 310; dangerously wounded, ii. 317, 318, on the quarrel between Montcalm and Vaudreuil, ii. 7; made brigadier, iii. 14; iii. 20, ordered to Ticonderoga, iii. 36, 39, letters from Vaudreuil to, iii. 54, 75, 118; makes no attempt to defend Ticonderoga, iii. 80, at Isle-aux-Noix, iii. 92, letters from Lévis to, iii. 95, 208, 216; retreat of, iii. 108; iii. 135, 139, 148, 156, 157; letter from Berniers to, iii. 173; on the battle of Ste Foy, iii. 204; in command at Sorel, iii 210; iii 211, half his force deserts, iii 212, iii 214, crosses to Montreal, iii 218, iii 286, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287

Braddock, Major-General Edward, defeat of, i 152, in chief command of regiments sent to Virginia, i 188, secret orders to, i 190, lands at Hampton, i 194, estimates of, i 195, Walpole's sketch of, i 195, 196, 198, his experience with Mrs Upton, i 196, his duel with Colonel Gurney, i 196, made governor of Gibraltar, i 197; his experience with George Anne Bellamy, i 197, question concerning his governorship at Gibraltar, i 197, fearlessness of, i 198, in the Coldstream Guards, i 198, at Alexandria, i 198, calls a council of provincial governors at Alexandria, i 198, lays his instructions before the council, i 201, settles on a plan of campaign, i 201, to lead the expedition against Fort Duquesne, i 201, urges the establishment of a general fund, i 202; makes Johnson sole superintendent of Indian affairs, i 203, a serious error, i 203, apathy shown towards his expedition, i 204, chafed to fury, i 205, Franklin a powerful ally of, i 205, Franklin visits the camp of, i 206, Franklin enables him to begin his march, i 206, 207, reaches Will's Creek, i 207; his force, i 208; the Virginians find no favor with, i 208, his ill humor, i 209, his aides-de-camp, i 210, despises the Indians, i 210; receives Captain Jack coldly, i 212, his march, i 212, 213, on the Monongahela, i 214, crosses the Monongahela, i 220, attacked by the French and Indians, i 223; the battle of Monongahela, i 224, his indignation at the Virginians' method of fighting, i 225, 226, his fierce intrepidity, i 227, his losses, i 227, sees that all is lost, i 228, orders a retreat, i 228, wounded, i 228, the retreat, i 232, burns his wagons and ammunition, i 233, death of, i 234; burial of, i 234, i 243, approves of Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 297, his dead soldiers left to the wolves, i 323; his expedition superfluous, ii 3, result of his defeat on the Indians, ii 15, the Quakers consider his defeat a just judgment, ii 25, ii 70, his defeat an Indian victory, ii 102, ii 342, 343, 363, 370, iii 228, 271, Langlade the author of his defeat, iii 273

Braddock, Fanny, death of, i 195, Goldsmith tells the story of, i 196

Bradstreet, Lieutenant-Colonel John, on the Niagara expedition, ii 12, placed in command of Shirley's company of boatmen, ii 81, attacked by Villiers, ii 81, defeats the French, ii 82, 83, reaches Albany, ii 83, Wolfe praises the conduct of, ii 83, his success temporarily silences the enemies of Shirley, ii 84, with Abercrombie, ii 299, 305, at Ticonderoga, ii 311, his expedition against Fort Frontenac, ii 335, De Noyan surren-

- ders to, ii 335; ii 364, to advance to Lake Ontario, iii. 38
- Bradstreet's boatmen, ii 81; attacked by Vilheis, ii 81; defeat the French, ii 82, 83, sent to reinforce Oswego, ii 93
- Brandenburg, House of, raises Prussia into importance, i 19
- Bicaud, naval comptroller at Quebec, ii. 227; official knavery of, ii 227; trial of, ii 241, arrested and tried, iii 281
- Brest, i 189, 190, 299, Montcalm at, ii. 48, 49
- Breton, Cape, restored by England, i 5, the French of, i 31, i 95, Mailland missionary on, i. 110; Acadian emigration to, i 118, 244, need of winter communication between Quebec and, i 128; i 185, 246, 270, 274; ii. 257, 262; iii. 231; ceded to England, iii 252.
- "Britannia," the, ii 237
- British Acadia, i. 244
- British-American colonies, the, future greatness of, iii. 169, 170, begin to show symptoms of revolt, iii. 260
- British Cabinet, the, half-hearted in the wish that the colonies should unite, i. 177, urges treaties with the Indians, i 178
- British colonies, the, subjection of Canada would lead to a revolt of, i 5; i. 24; differences among, i 27, 28; then attitude towards each other, i 36, drifting into war, i. 38, heterogeneous structure of, i. 65, debt due Governor Dinwiddie from, i 142; urged by the British Cabinet to make treaties with the Indians, i. 178, Franklin's famous project of union, i 182; slaves in, i. 200;
- Shirley paints the dangers be setting, i 200; debt of gratitude due to Shirley and Dinwiddie from, i. 201; their ready response to Pitt's appeal for men, ii. 289
- British maritime provinces, the, i. 294
- British navigation laws, ii 291.
- Brittany, coast of, ii 252.
- Brodhead, Ml., i. vii.
- Bioghe, i 12
- Brookfield, the village of, iii 225.
- Brown, Lieutenant, at Louisbourg, ii. 265, on the Heights of Abraham, iii. 140
- Buchannon, i 235, 236.
- Buisson, the, Amherst descends, iii 217.
- Bull, Fort, built by the English on Wood Creek, ii. 61; Lery sent by Vandreuil against, ii 61; Shirley's regiment at, ii 61, frightful struggle at, ii 61, destroyed by Lery, ii. 62
- Bullitt, Captain, in Grant's expedition, ii 361, 362.
- Buttes-à-Neveu, iii. 134, 190, 192, 199.
- Burd, Colonel James, of Virginia, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, letter from Trent to, ii. 28; ii 343, 346, 347, 348, 364.
- Burgesses, the House of, in Virginia, Governor Dinwiddie's disputes with, i. 143, 170; social significance of, i. 169, i. 241, ii. 16 See also Virginia Assembly, the.
- Burgoynes, General John, ii. 308; iii 249; on Langlade, iii 273.
- Burke, on Wolfe, iii 111.
- Burke, Captain, escapes from the Indian massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 200.

- Burnaby, on Williamsburg, i 170
 Burned Camp, the, ii 177, 179, 300
 Burney, Thomas, escapes from Pique Town, i 90
 Burton, Lieutenant-Colonel, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i 226, reports on the state of the provincial forces, ii 88, on the provincial camps, ii 89, at Point Levi, iii 124, 125, 132, on the Heights of Abraham, iii 133, 140
 Bury, Viscount, brings charges against the colonies, ii 290
 Bussy, M. de, sent as envoy to London, iii 241.
 Bute, Earl of, made Secretary of State, iii 239, declines to support Pitt, iii 243, holds power after Pitt's resignation, iii 244, becomes First Lord of the Treasury, iii 246; forced into a war with Spain, iii 247, feels the need of peace, iii 249, the Peace of Paris, iii 251
 Byng, Admiral, i 39, ii 251
- CADET, JOSEPH, ii. 222, early life of, ii 226, made commissary-general by Bigot, ii 226; his official knavery, ii 227-230, becomes the richest man in the colony, ii 229, asks for a patent of nobility, ii 235; Bigot breaks with, ii 241; forced to disgorge, ii 241, iii 9, 15, his arrival at Quebec, iii 39; Vaudreuil's praise of, iii. 40; lives in luxury at Quebec, iii 44, iii. 164, 167, 203, arrested, iii. 231, his trial, iii 231, 232, his sentence, iii 232
 Cahokia, i 44
 Caldwell, village of, ii 187, 192.
 Calvin, i 30
 Cambis, the battalion of, at Louisbourg, ii 259
 Cambridge, iii 226
 Campaign of 1744, the severe, Montcalm in, ii 45.
 Campbell, Lieutenant Alexander, on the Canadian ladies, iii 174, iii 283
 Campbell, Major Colin, i 237
 Campbell, Donald, murder of, iii. 282
 Campbell, Major Duncan, with Abercrombie, ii 299, his death at Ticonderoga, ii 316, iii 283, legend of, iii 281-285, burial of, iii 283
 Campbell, James, iii 281
 Campbell, Captain John, on the defeat of Braddock, i 235, 236, at Ticonderoga, ii 316
 Canada, a position of great strength, i 4, its conquest made possible by the fatuity of Louis XV and his Pompidour, i 4, its possession a question of diplomacy, i 4, its subjection would lead to a revolt of the British colonies, i 5, the key to a boundless interior, i 22, census in 1754 of, i 23, made a citadel of the State religion, i 23, had a vigor of her own, i. 25, position of, i 26, Indian tribes of, i 26, French claims to, i 27, no popular legislature in, i. 38, necessary as a barrier against English ambition, i 40, Detroit the "Touraine and Beauce" of, i 80; the question of boundaries, i 129, French expedition fitted out for, i 189, Acadian exiles in, i 292, the troupes de la marine the permanent military establishment of,

- ii 55, united effective strength of the battalions in, ii 55, the colonial artillery of, ii 56, the militia of, ii 56, the Indian fighting force of, ii 58, Montcalm's impressions of, ii 59, 60, must be destroyed, ii 107; Montreal the military heart of, ii 141, dual government of, ii 231, the prey of official packhals, ii 234, her desperate financial condition, ii 236, card-money and ordonnances in, ii 236, peril of, ii 371, deplorable condition of, iii 11, France refuses aid to, iii 15, rumors of an English attack on, iii 16, 17, retreat of Levis into, iii 206; Amherst plans a triple attack on, iii 207, passes to the British Crown, iii 220, Louis XV responsible for the loss of, iii 223, exodus of leaders from, iii 229, the question of restoration to France, iii 250, ceded to England, iii 251.
- Canadian, the, characteristics of, i 25
- Canadian artillery, the, ii 56
- Canadian Church, the, does not check the corruptions in the colony, ii 234
- Canadian Indians, the, ii 58.
- Canadian militia, the, ii 56; description of, ii 57
- Canadian missions, the, i 72
- Canadians, the, offended by the lofty bearing of Duquesne, i 90; in the Ohio enterprise, i 93, 134; in the battle of Monongahela, i 223, slight losses of, i 231; incapacity of, i 293, at Crown Point, i 307, 310, 311, 315; i 316; in the battle of Lake George, i 318, 320, 324, at Fort Frontenac, ii 10, at Fort Niagara, ii 10, guard Fort Frontenac, ii 62; ii 81, condition of the camps of, ii 90, in the attack on Oswego, ii 95, at Ticonderoga, ii 108, persuade the Indians to join a war-party, ii 116, ii 148, Vaudreuil's reports on the valor of, ii 148-150, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 178; attack German Flats, ii 209, reinforce Hebecourt, ii 215, at Louisbourg, ii 271, at Ticonderoga, ii 301, iii 4, 5; discouragement of, iii 11, at Quebec, iii 38, 40, 43, 44, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 72, 73, begin to desert, iii 61, 64, Wolfe's proclamation to, iii 65, their disgust, iii 65, suffer from Wolfe's severities, iii 67, iii 95, 104, 106, 107, 108, 122, 123, 124, 128, 132, 135, 137, 138, 139, 143, 144, 145, 146, 153, 157, 158, befriended by Murray, iii 176, iii 183, 185, 186, 187, 190, at Ste-Foy, iii 195, 196, iii 206, 209, Murray's proclamation to, iii 211, Vaudreuil issues a counter-proclamation to, iii 212, doubly ruined, iii 212; iii 218, 221
- Canadians of Gaspé, the, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 180
- Canard River, the, i 278, 282
- Candiac, the Château of, ii 42, Montcalm's family seat at, ii 45, 47, 141, iii 8, 162
- Cannibalism, among the Indians, ii 171, 207, 208.
- Canseau, feeble garrison at, i 96; destroyed by the French, i 97
- Canseau, Strait of, Acadian emigration to, i 113.
- Cape Cod, sends Shuley and against the French, i 255.

- Cape Tourmente, mountain of, iii 45, 48, 104
- "Capricieux," the, at Louisbourg, i 259, burned, ii 272, Tourville commander of, ii 287
- Cap-Rouge, iii 50, 66, 70, 115, Bougainville's headquarters at, iii 120, iii 122, 123, 126, 127, 132, 148, 177, 189
- Cap-Rouge River, the, iii 187, 203
- Cap-Santé, ii 224.
- Card-money, in Canada, ii 236
- Caillon, ii 59, 149, 219, iii 20
See also Ticonderoga
- Carillon, Fort See Ticonderoga, Fort
- Carleton, Colonel Guy, iii 30, at Quebec, iii 66; lands at Pointe-aux-Trembles, iii 66, iii 289
- Carlisle, frontier village of, i 235, ii 343, Forbes at, ii 344
- Carlos III. becomes King of Spain, iii 242, negotiations between Choiseul and, iii 242, the Family Compact, iii 242.
- Carlyle, on Frederic of Prussia, iii 236
- Carolinas, the, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i 144
- Carter, Colonel Charles, letter from Dinwiddie to, i 237
- Carter, Landon, ii 16
- Carteret, John, i 10
- Carthagena, the luckless attack on, i 255.
- Cartier, Jacques, iii 184
- Carver, Captain Jonathan, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 200, 203
- Cascades, the, Amherst descends, iii 217
- Casgrain, Abbé H R, on Dumas' efforts to temper the horrors of the border warfare, ii 15, on Quebec after the siege, iii 173; on the expedition of Lévis, iii 187
- Castle Wilham, British troops quartered at, ii 128.
- Caswell, John, letter from Jonathan Caswell to, i 304
- Caswell, Jonathan, letter to John Caswell from, i 303
- Catawbas, the, Dinwiddie asks aid against the French from, i 144; in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 347
- Cathedral, the, at Quebec, iii 173
- Catherine, of Russia, iii 246
- Caughnawaga, an asylum for Indians converted to the French, i 68, description of, i 68, ii 58, 353 See also Saut St. Louis
- Caughnawagas, the, i 26
- Caughnawagas of Saut St Louis, the, at Fort Duquesne, i 216
- Cavalier traditions, i 31
- Cayugas, the, i 66, 69, ii 78
- Cedars, the, Amherst descends, iii 217.
- "Célèbre," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259, set on fire by a bomb, ii 272
- Céloron, see Bienville, Céloron de
- Celtic Irish Catholics, the, in Pennsylvania, ii 25
- "Centurion," the, i 194, iii 71, 72
- Cerberus, Father Piquet's dog, i 73.
- "Chain-belt," of wampum, the, i 179
- Chalmers, i 84
- Chambly, abandoned by the French, iii 214
- Chambly, Fort, ii 141.
- Chambord, i 12

- Champlain, Lake, i 4, 26, 199,
Dieskau ordered to, i 300, i.
305, 309, ii 64, 86, Montcalm on, ii 95, ii 106, 116, 123, 130, 136, 141, 164, 165, 166, 294, 306,
308, 310, 328; in 18, 36, 80, 92,
95, 96, 207, 208, 211
- Champs Élysées, the, i 16
- Chandler, Chaplain, on the delay at Fort Lyman, i 326
- Chaplains, the provincial, ii 324.
- Châteaubourg, ii 226, iii 108,
152
- Charlebourg, the mountain of, ii
228
- Charles VI, of Austria, death of,
i 21
- Charlestown, iii 83. See also
"Number Four"
- Charlevoix, ii 47; his account of Quebec, ii. 47
- Chartres, Fort, i 44, 80, 88.
- Château, the, at Quebec, iii. 201.
- Château battery, the, at Quebec,
iii 50
- Château Bigot, ii 226
- Château Richer, the parish of, burned by Wolfe, iii 104, 105
- Château, St Louis, the, iii. 290.
- Châtelet at Paris, the, iii 231.
- Chatham, Lady, iii. 245
- Chaudière, the, i. 175, 191, 199;
Shirley's plan to make an inroad down, ii. 68.
- Chautauqua Lake, i 42
- Chebucto, harbor of, i. 96.
- Chelsea (England), iii 289.
- Chelsea Hospital, the, iii 289
- Cherbourg, ii 252
- Cherokees, the, i 72, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i 144, ii 155, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 347; in Piquet's war-party, iii. 263.
- Chester County (Penn), ii 33.
- Chesterfield, Lord, i. 10; on Lord Albemarle, i. 187, ii. 246, on the gloomy prospects of England,
ii. 250, ii 295
- "Chèvre," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259
- Chew, Ensign, ii 349
- Chickasaws, the, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from,
i 144.
- Chignecto, i 122, English fort at,
i 248, 266; i 289
- Chignecto Bay, i 98, 125
- Chignecto Channel, i 277
- Chingué (on the Alleghany), i.
49.
- Chingué (of Céloron), i 49;
Gist reaches, i 57, Washington at, i 138.
- Chinodahichetha River, the, see Kanawha River, the
- Chipody, the fertile shores of, i.
125; the Acadians on, i 125,
127, i. 256, 263, 285
- Choate, J, on Bradstreet's Fight,
ii 83
- Choctaws, the, i. 72, ii 155; in Piquet's war-party, iii 263
- Choiseul, Duc de, made Minister of Foreign Affairs, iii. 240; character of, iii 240, proposes a congress of belligerent powers at Augsburg, iii. 241, Pitt rejects his overtures, iii. 241; makes the "Family Compact" with Carlos III., iii 242, feels the need of peace, iii 249, on the presence of the French in America, iii. 250.
- Christ, Iroquois legend of, i 58;
Father Piquet's instruction on,
i 71.
- Christ Church, in Philadelphia, ii.
371.

- Christian Indians, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 176
- Christie, Captain, on the panic among the English, ii 206
- Civil wars, the, in England, i. 7.
- Clare, i 294
- Claverie, a trader, ii 228
- Cleaveland, Miss Abby E, ii 324
- Cleaveland, Chaplain Ebenezer, ii 322
- Cleaveland, Chaplain John, ii. 282, his indignation at Abercrombie, ii 322, 323; his interview with Abercrombie, ii 324; ii 327, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii. 335
- Clergy battery, the, at Quebec, iii 50
- Clerk, at Ticonderoga, ii 309
- Clermont, Comte de, i. 12, driven out of Hanover by Ferdinand, ii. 252, recalled, ii 252
- Clinton, Governor, of New York, i 65, letter from Johnson to, i. 68; personally maintains Oswego, i. 77, correspondence between La Jonquière and, i 83, 84, i. 93.
- Clive, Lord, wins the great victory of Plassey, ii 251
- Cobequid, i 98, Girard at, i 111; emigration of the people of, i 114.
- Cobequid, mountains of, i. 279, 291
- Cocquard, Rev Claude Godefroy, on the horrors of border warfare, ii 16, on Bradstreet's Fight, ii. 84, on the capture of Oswego by the French, ii 100
- Coffen, Stephen, on the Ohio enterprise, i 136.
- Colbert, iii. 257
- Colden, Alexander, on the battle of Ticonderoga, iii 280.
- Coldfoot, the great Miami chief, i 87
- Coldstream Guards, the, Braddock in, i 198
- Colonial system, of England, the, i 6
- Colonists, the, description of, i 176, two conditions essential to, i 176
- "Comète," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259
- Conewango River, the, i 46
- Condé, the great, i 12; iii 24.
- Conflans, Admiral, routed by the English, iii 247
- Connecticut, colony of, i 28; sends commissioners to Albany, i 65; joins Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 297, jealousy of, i 301, Parliament makes a grant to, ii. 69, sacrifices made by, ii 292
- Connecticut regiment, the, at Fort Lyman, i 316, 325, with Abercrombie, ii 299, 329, 330, 331.
- Connecticut River, the, i. 30, iii. 83, 97, 99, 101
- Conner, James, an English scout, at the ruins of Oswego, ii 103
- Contades, succeeds Clermont, i 12; ii 252
- Continental War, the, begun by Frederic of Prussia, ii 243, supported by Pitt, iii 237
- Contrecoeur, lands at Presqu'isle, i 149, sends Jumonville to scour the country, i 153, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156; his harangue to the Indians at Fort Duquesne, i 159, 160, 216; determines to ambuscade the English, i 218, 219; on the battle of Monongahela, i 223, 229, succeeded by Dumas in the command at Fort Du-

- quesne, in 14, 15; in 117, pension asked for, in 270; in 271, 273, receives the cross of the order of St Louis, in 273
- Conway, General, letter from Walpole to, in 204
- Cook, the navigator, voyages of, in 258
- Cope, Major Jean-Baptiste, chief of Le Loutre's mission, i 108; makes a treaty at Halifax, i 108, treachery of, i 109, 123
- Corbière, in 172
- Cork, i 188
- Cornier, Madame, in 148.
- Cornwallis, Edward, governor of Halifax, i 97, requires a new oath of allegiance from the Acadians, i 101, receives the Acadian deputies, i 102, his answer, i 102, i 108, 109, discovers the work of the French priests, i 111, his indignation, i 111, his forbearance toward the Acadians, i 115; his addresses to the Acadian deputies, i 117, offers a reward for the head of Le Loutre, i 119; i 266
- Cornwallis, Lord, i 97
- Corpron, official knavery of, in 227, 234, trial of, in 241, arrested and tried, in 231
- Corry, William, on the quarrel over quartering the troops, in 128
- Cortland, manor of, i 35
- Cosnan, Captain, at Quebec, in 63
- Cosne, De, see De Cosne
- Côteau du Lac, the, Amherst descends, iii 217
- Côte d'Abraham, in 128.
- Côte Ste Geneviève, in 144, 145, 149, 188
- Coueurs de bois*, the, at Detroit, in 17; at Quebec, iii 63
- Courserac, Chevalier de, at Louisbourg, in 279, on the siege of Louisbourg, in 287
- Courtemanche, Canadian brigade of, in Montcalm's expedition, in 180
- Courvol, at Quebec, in 69
- "Covent Garden Tragedy," Fielding's, i 196
- Cox, in 124
- Crawford, Chaplain William, trials of, in 91, 92
- Cremille, i 190
- Croghan, George, i 45, at Muskingum, i 57, on White Woman's Creek, i 58, among the Miamis, i 60, report of, i 61; journal of, i 63; his report rejected by the Pennsylvania Assembly, i 63, sent to the Mingoes and the Delawares, i 63, reward offered for the scalp of, i 84, accusations against, i 85, at Fort Cumberland, i 211
- Crown Point, i 26, 180, the key to Lake Champlain, i 199, English plans against, i 200, William Johnson to lead the expedition against, i 201, 202; threatens the northern colonies, i 206, Shirley's plan to attack, i 206, the French prepare to defend, i 209, Diekan at, i 307, the expedition a failure, i 325, the New Jersey regiment diverted by Shirley from, in 12, in 60, 64, 65, Shirley's new plan to attack, in 68, 69, 71, 86; in 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 129, 130, 141, 293, in 77, Amherst plans an attack upon, in 78; Bourlamaque ordered by Vaudreuil to abandon, in 80, Amherst takes possession of, in 82, Amherst builds a new fort at,

- in 83, 84, 92, 94; in 97, 108, 207; Haviland at, in 213
- Cruger, mayor of New York, in 128
- Cruikshank, Captain, in 326.
- Culloden, the fight of, the Stuarts receive their death-blow at, in 8, Duke of Cumberland at, in 10, in 22, in 25
- Cumberland, in 107
- Cumberland, the shores of, in 277
- Cumberland County (Penn.), laid waste by the Indians, in 30
- Cumberland, Duke of, at Culloden and Fontenoy, in 10, an indifferent soldier, in 186, in 188, 203, 243, prejudiced against Shirley, in 108; opposed to Pitt, in 246; the miscarriage of, in 250, recalled in disgrace, in 252
- Cumberland, Fort, in 207, description of, in 207, Croghan at, in 211, Indians at, in 211, Innes in command at, in 234; Dunbar arrives at, in 235, Fort Beauséjour becomes, in 263, the Acadians at, in 264, Winslow at, in 277, in 291; in 15, 17; Indian massacre near, in 28; in 341, Knox at, in 21; St. Patrick's Day at, in 22
- Cumming, Miss C. F. Gordon, in 284
- Cummings, Colonel, in command at Fort William Henry, in 321
- Cunningham, aide-de-camp to Abercrombie, in 321
- DAINE, on Belétre's campaign, in 211, on the maladministration of Canada, in 241; on Wolfe's victory, in 143, presents Ramsay with a petition for capitulating, in 156
- D'Alembert, see Alembert, D'
- Dalling, Major, sent to occupy Fort Espagnol, in 284; at Quebec, in 68, sent against the French skirmishers, in 181; at Ste-Foy, in 193
- Dalquier, Lieutenant-Colonel, in 147, at Ste-Foy, in 194
- Dalzell, Captain, in 329, 330.
- D'Anthonay, see Anthonay, D'
- Danvers, in 323
- Darby, Major, at Isle-aux-Noix, in 214
- D'Argens, see Argens, D'
- D'Argenson, see Argenson, D'
- D'Arnouville, Machault, see Arnouville, Machault d'
- Daudin, priest of Pisiquid, on the idea of replacing the French priests in Acadia, in 112; sent to Halifax, in 253
- Daun, the Austrian general, gains a partial victory over Frederic of Prussia, in 233
- "Dauphin," the, in 192; escapes from the English, in 193
- Dauphin's Bastion, the, at Louisbourg, in 260, 271, 275
- Dauphin's Battery, the, at Quebec, in 50
- Dauphin's Gate at Louisbourg, in 280
- Davison, a trader, accompanies Washington as Indian interpreter, in 138
- Day, Mrs C M, in 101
- De Bassignac, see Bassignac, De
- De Cosne, advises England of the French preparations for Canadian expedition, in 191
- Defiance, Mount, in 308, 309, 311.
- De Gaspé, see Gaspé, De
- Déjean, Montcalm's servant, in 47
- Delancey, Captain, in 89
- Delancey, Governor, of New York,

1. 146, letter from Dinwiddie to, i. 168, answer of the Assembly to the appeal of, i. 174, his letters to the Lords of Trade, i. 174, summoned by Bladdock to Alexandria, i. 199, letter from Wiaall to, i. 312, i. 327, takes umbrage at Shirley, ii. 13, joins hands with Johnson against Shirley, ii. 13, secures Shirley's removal, ii. 70; letter from Webb to, ii. 173, deals with a mutinous militia, ii. 205
- Delancey, Oliver, ii. 128.
- Delaware, colony of, i. 36
- Delaware, George, receives Post; ii. 353
- Delaware Indians, the, in the Ohio valley, i. 43, village of, i. 48; i. 49, 61, not hearty in the English cause, i. 62, Crogan sent to, i. 63, profess devotion to the French, i. 135, invited to join the English, i. 155, join the French against the English, i. 159, 160; i. 210, set on by Dumas to attack the border settlements, ii. 14; pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79, Governor Morris declares war against, ii. 80; Governor Belcher declares war against, ii. 80, Forbes tries to win over, ii. 351, wavering, ii. 352; Post's mission among, ii. 353-356, attend the convention at Easton, ii. 356, join the English, ii. 359
- Delaware towns, the, Post at, ii. 357
- Deloche, in charge of the fireships at Quebec, iii. 52, his nerves fail, iii. 52
- Demoiselle, the, see La Demoiselle.
- De Monts, Acadian commission of, i. 128.
- Denmark, royal house of, i. 12
- Denny, Governor Armstrong's report on the destruction of Kittanning to, ii. 113, his attitude on Loudon's demand for free quarters for his troops, ii. 127.
- De Noyan, see Noyan, De
- Desandrouins, the engineer, on the capture of Oswego, ii. 103, at Ticonderoga, ii. 306
- Desauniers, the Demoiselles, at Caughnawaga, i. 68
- Deschambault, at Montreal, ii. 212
- Deschambault, Murray at, iii. 106; garrison of, iii. 187, Dumas stationed at, iii. 207
- Deschamps, Chief Justice, ii. 288
- Deschenault, ii. 234
- Descombles, the engineer, ii. 95; death of, ii. 97.
- Desgouttes, naval commander at Louisbourg, ii. 270, in council at Louisbourg, ii. 276, Droucour's correspondence with, ii. 287
- Des Habitants River, the, i. 278, 282
- Desherbiers, in command of Louisbourg, i. 105, advises the Acadians not to take the oath of allegiance, i. 105, letter from the minister to, i. 105; engages Le Loutre to distribute presents among the Indians, i. 107; i. 114
- Désirade, the Island of, restored by England, iii. 252
- Desmaloizes, Mademoiselle, see Péan, Madame.
- Des Moines River, the, ii. 174.
- De Soto, i. 27.
- Detroit, i. 60; described by Bonnetcamp, i. 80; the "Touraine and Beauce of Canada," i. 80; Bienville in command at, i. 81; ef-

- forts to make it the centre of French power in the West, i. 81, L ry's plan of, i. 81; population of, i. 82, small-pox in, i. 88, i. 89, Langlade at, i. 89; i. 217, 227, i. 329, 350, 369, iii. 86, 90, 91, 208
 Detroit, Fort, important position of, i. 80; described by Bonnetcamp, i. 80; i. 85, 86
 Detroit Indians, the, ii. 364.
 Detroit River, the, i. 27
 Dettingen, victory of, i. 22, iii. 25, 237
 Devonshire, Duke of, ii. 247
 "Devourer of Villages," the, see Vaudreuil
 Diamond, Cape, iii. 50, 54, 200
 "Diana," the, arrives at Quebec, iii. 202
 Diderot, i. 18, 321, 322.
 Dier ville, i. 270.
 Dieskau, Baron, in command of the French troops sent to Canada, i. 189, sails from Brest, i. 299, ordered to Lake Champlain, i. 300, at Crown Point, i. 307; prepares a surprise for Johnson, i. 307, the Indians a source of annoyance to, i. 308, resolves to attack Fort Lyman, i. 309; daring to rashness, i. 311, the march against Johnson, i. 311; lays an ambush for Johnson, i. 313, the attack, i. 314; retreat of the provincials, i. 314, in the battle of Lake George, i. 316-320, wounded, i. 318; captured by the English, i. 319; routed by the English, i. 319; protected by Johnson from the Indians, i. 320; his escape, i. 321; his gratitude, i. 321, sails for England, i. 322, Sewell on, i. 322, his death, i. 322, correspondence of, i. 328; replaced by Montcalm, ii. 42, ii. 47, 54, 59, 63, 187, 294
 Dinwiddie, Governor, of Virginia, on the English fur-traders, i. 45, on the uncertain ownership of the Ohio valley, i. 65, jealously watchful of French aggression, i. 137, 142, sends Washington to summon the French to withdraw from the Ohio, i. 137, forts built by, i. 137, his letter to Saint-Pierre, i. 139, 140, Saint-Pierre's answer, i. 140, Washington makes his report to, i. 142, sketch of, i. 142; unpopularity of, i. 142; debt due from the British colonies to, i. 142, urges the Virginia Assembly to build forts on the Ohio, i. 142, ordered by the King to repel invaders from Virginia, i. 142, his disputes with the House of Burgesses, i. 143, 170, 171, unable to obey the instructions of the King, i. 144, orders a draft from the militia, i. 144; places Washington in command, i. 144, his appeals for help, i. 144, 146, appoints a rendezvous at Will's Creek, i. 144; his letter to Lord Fairfax, i. 144; his instructions to Washington, i. 144, gains a frugal appropriation from the Assembly, i. 145; his letters to the Lords of Trade, i. 145, 165, 168, 184; his letters to Hanbury, i. 145, 149, his energy, i. 146; invites the Indians to meet him at Winchester, i. 146, provincial apathy to his schemes, i. 146, 147, his vexation at the blighting of his plans, i. 149; orders a rendezvous at Redstone

- Creek, i 150, rejoices at news of Washington's success, i 150, 151; letters from Duillion to, i 154; highly approves of Washington's conduct, i 156, on the losses in the fight at Great Meadows, i 165, Washington's defeat a heavy blow to, i 168; on the condition of the King's companies from New York, i 168; letter from Innes to, i 169, letter to Governor Hamilton from, i 171, letter to Abercrombie from, i 171; attitude of, i 177; exasperated at the supineness of the provinces, i 177, becoming more and more alarmed, i 183; his letter to Lord Granville, i 183, 184, vexed by Governor Glon, i 183, appeals to England for aid, i 183, his letters to Albemarle, Halifax, Fox, Haldernesse, and Walpole, i 184, on the arrival of Braddock, i 194, his letter to Governor Dobbs, i 194, at Alexandria, i 198; in the front of opposition to French designs, i 201, debt of gratitude due to, i 201; on the defeat of Braddock, i 229; Braddock's defeat announced to, i 235, letter from Orme to, i 237; his letter to Colonel Carter, i 237; his reply to Orme, i 239, his reply to Washington, i 239; urges Dunbar to wipe out Braddock's defeat, i 240, Dunbar's reply, i 240; his view of Dunbar's conduct, i 241, letter from Governor Morris to, ii 9; ii 16; gives Washington cold support, ii 17; soured by disappointment, ii 17, his friendship for Innes, ii 17, Washington protests against the lack of support to, ii 18, 19; conceives a dislike to Washington, ii 339; on the death of Jumonville, iii 269.
- Dinwiddie Papers, the, i 144, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156, on Dinwiddie's appeal to England for aid, i 184
- Divination among the Indians, ii 126
- Dobbs, Governor, of North Carolina, letter from Dinwiddie to, i 194; summoned by Braddock to Alexandria, i 198
- Dobson, Captain, i 238.
- Dog Tribe, the, i 72.
- Dominica, seized by the English, iii 247, 252
- Doucheater, Lord, see Carleton, Guy
- Doreil, commissary of war, i 189; on the French losses in the battle of Lake George, i 323; his account of Rogers' fight, ii 220; on the maladministration of Canada, ii 241; on Abercrombie's missed opportunity, ii 309; Montcalm announces his victory to, ii 318; on the peril of Canada, ii 371; iii 11, sent to make an appeal at court, iii 12, at Versailles, iii 13; letters of, iii 20; iii 279
- Douville, a French officer, ii 15, death of, ii 110
- Dover, ii 249.
- Draper, iii 273
- Dresden, taken from Frederic of Prussia, iii 234.
- Drowned Lands, the, i 309, 313.
- Druconr, Chevalier de, governor of Louisbourg, i 262, 286, 292; journal of, ii 260, prepares for

- defence, ii 261, on the number of soldiers stationed at Fresh-water Cove, ii 264, ii 268, defends the harbor, ii 269, exchanges courtesies with Amherst, ii 270, burning of his fleet, ii 272, conflagration in the citadel, ii 273, his deplorable position, ii 274, decides to capitulate, ii 276, negotiations with Boscawen and Amherst, ii 277-280, receives a memorial from Prévost, ii 278, signs the articles of capitulation, ii 280, his diary of the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287
- Drucour, Madame, a woman of heroic spirit, ii 270, at Louisbourg, ii 273, Amherst's courtesies to, ii 281.
- Drullon, letters to Dinwiddie from, i 154
- "Dublin," the, ii 256.
- Dublin, iii 30
- Du Boulay, Angélique Louise Talon, see Montcalm, Madame de
- Dubrowski, ii 242
- Du Cava, ii 275
- Duchat, Captain, on Ticonderoga, ii 66.
- Duchesnaye, ii 224
- Dumas, tutor of Montcalm, ii 42, his report on his pupil, ii 43
- Dumas, Captain, at Fort Duquesne, i 216, 218; in the battle of Monongahela, i 223, 224, 229, replaces Contrecoeur in the command of Fort Duquesne, ii 14; sets the western tribes to attack the border settlements, ii 14, his report on the results, ii 15, tries to temper the horrors, ii 15, his report of the destruction of Kittanning, ii 114, at Quebec, iii 56, failure of his night attacks, iii 57, 61, sent to strengthen accessible points, iii 66, 70, stationed at Deschambault, iii 207, iii 211, 271, 272, receives the cross of the order of St Louis, iii 273
- Dumont, iii 192, 193, 194
- Dunbar, Colonel Thomas, in the battle of Monongahela, i 214, 228, 232, 233, at the Great Meadows, i 234, arrives at Fort Cumberland, i 235, i 239, 240, urged by Dinwiddie to wipe out Braddock's defeat, i 240, his reply, i 240, views on the conduct of, i 241, receives orders to renew offensive operations, i 241, his tardy response, i 242, his unpardonable retreat, ii 14
- Dunbar, Lieutenant, in Rogers' expedition, iii 99
- Dunbar's regiment, i 208
- "Dunkirk," the, attacks the French fleet, i 192
- Dunkirk, the fortress of, iii 242; destroyed by the French, iii 252
- "Dunkirk of America," the, see Louisbourg
- Duquesne, Fort, built by the French, i 149, 153, 156, 158; receives strong reinforcements, i 159, Coulon de Villiers at, i 159; Contrecoeur harangues the Indians at, i 159, 160, i 165, Villiers returns exultant to, i 167, English plans against, i 201, Braddock to lead the expedition against, i 201, i 213, 214, location of, i 215, description of, i 215, garrison of, i 216, ii 10, Dumas succeeds Contrecoeur in the command at,

- ii. 14, Shirley's plan to attack, ii 68, the attack abandoned, ii 69, ii 110, Pitt's plan to capture, ii. 253, 254, Forbes' expedition against, ii 337; Ligneris in command at, ii 350, Forbes' advance against, ii 367, deserted by the French, ii 368, ii 371, iii. 8, 77, 270 See also Pittsburg
- Duquesne, Marquis, governor of Canada, i 44, the great naval commander, i 90, on the Abbé Piquet, i 71, i 88; receives the captive traders from Langlade, i 90, highly praises Langlade, i 90, sketch of, i 90, on the attack on Pickawillany, i 90, prepares to occupy the upper waters of the Ohio, i 91, the colonial minister not in sympathy with, i. 91; exasperated by opposition, i 92, the Ohio enterprise, i 93, 133; his letter to Marin, i 134, appoints Saint-Pierre to succeed Marin, i 135, his plan for forts, i 135, his letter on the Ohio enterprise, i 136, i 189; ordered to destroy Fort Halifax, i. 190; seeks for a pretext to attack the English, i 248, supports Le Loutra, i. 252, his reception of the Acadian deputies, i. 254, recalled, i 290, restores order in the troupes de la marine, ii 56, on the troupes de la marine, ii 56
- Durell, Admiral, iii 32, 39, arrives at Isle-aux-Coudres, iii 39, 44, iii 46
- Durham Terrace, at Quebec, iii 201.
- Dury, i 197
- Dussieux, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156; ii 151; on the responsibility for the signal of butchery at Fort William Henry, ii 203, on the trial of Bigot and his associates, iii 232
- Dutch, the, in Pennsylvania, i. 33; in New York, i 35
- Dutch hours, the, i 298
- Dutch Indian commissioners, the, at Albany, i 202, misconduct of, i 202
- Dutch of Albany, the, i. 69, alienate the Mohawks, i 178; ready to do anything to save their trade, i 200, characteristics of, ii. 5; Shirley's agents allied to, ii 12, ii 140
- Dutch Reformed Church, the, in New York, i 35.
- Duvivier, Major, at Louisbourg, ii 279.
- Dwight, Benjamin, letter from Ephraim Williams to, i 305, on the battle of Lake George, i. 328, 329.
- East, the, tempest gathering in, i 94
- Eastburn, on the destruction of Fort Bull, ii 62.
- Easton, town of, ii 351; convention held at, ii. 356, 370
- "Echo," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259, sent to Quebec for aid, ii. 269, captured by the English, ii 269
- Edinburgh, the University of, iii 129
- Edward, Fort, Captain Alexander Murray in command at, i 278, Winalow at, i 278; i 280, 282, 285, 291, 305; name of Fort Lyman changed to, i 327, ii 36, 75, Colonel David Woos-

- ter at, ii 76, Winslow's command at, ii 88, description of the camp at, ii 89, 90, ii 94, London at, ii 108, ii 129, 140, 163, Marin makes a dash at, ii 173, General Webb at, ii 184, ii 188, 194, 196, 200, 201, Johnson joins Webb at, ii 205, impossible for Montcalm to besiege, ii 207, Captain Haviland in command at, ii 215, ii 217, 218, 219, 328, 329, 331, iii 7, 79, 276, 277, 278, 280, 283, 285
- Edwards, i 30
- Egmont, Cape, iii 34
- Egremont, Earl of, letter from the Count de Fuentes to, iii 241
- Elder, John, on the Indian massacres, ii 30
- Elizabeth of Russia, daughter of Peter the Great, i 20, her hatred for Frederic the Great, ii 39, ready to attack Frederic, ii 243, iii 236, 239, death of, iii 245
- Elizabeth Castle, Le Loutre, confined in, i 261
- Emerson, M^r, of New Hampshire, ii 327
- England, restores Cape Breton to France, i 5, benefits derived from the Seven Years' War, i 5, gains the mastery of North America and India, i 6, her colonial system, i 6; reign of George II in, i 7, civil wars and the Restoration, i 7, social aspect of, i 8, 9; nobility of France compared with that of, i 13, supports Austria against Bavaria, i 21, France cedes Acadia to, i 95, the Acadians swear fidelity to, i 95, restores Louisbourg to France, i 96, the question of American boundaries between France and, i 128, Dinwiddie appeals for aid to, i 183, military and naval strength of, i 187, weak in leadership, i 187, policy of, i 188, sends regiments to Virginia, i 188, mutual dissimulation, i 190, France admits that the Kennebec River belongs to, i 190, declares war against France, ii 38, France declares war against, ii 38, always trembling for Hanover, ii 39, makes a defensive treaty with Prussia, ii 39, secures a guarantee against France, ii 39, a Protestant nation, ii 41, makes common cause with Frederic of Prussia, ii 243, dragged into the Continental War, ii 245, loses Minorca, ii 245, the reins of power fall into the hands of Pitt, ii 245, her gloomy prospects, ii 250, her successes in India, ii 251, rejoices in the successes of her Prussian allies, ii 251, receives the news of the fall of Louisbourg with noisy rapture, ii 281, effect of the news of Wolfe's victory and death in, iii 168, 169, in the full career of success, iii 232, declares war against Spain, iii 247; temporary reverses in Newfoundland, iii 249, French possessions ceded by the Peace of Paris to, iii 251, effects of the Seven Years' War on, iii 257, 258, mistress of the seas, iii 258, her glory in giving birth to the United States, iii 258, her British-American provinces show symptoms of revolt, iii 260
- English, the, in Pennsylvania, i 33, in New York, i 84, make

- a treaty with the Miamis, i 60; favorable outlook in the West for, i 62, Father Piquet's scheme to drive them from the Ohio, i 72; the Ohio Indians ride with, i 87, on the Miami, i 88, the Acadians well used by, i 99, La Jonquière the determined adversary of, i 99, hostilities of the Acadians against, i 101, occupy Beaubassin, i 120, the defeat at Fort Necessity doubly disastrous to, i 167, call a convention at Albany, i 179, Chief Hendrick's speech, i 180, realize the importance of union, i 181; Franklin's famous project of union, i 182, their peril in Acadia, i 247, Fort Beauséjour a continual menace to, i 248; Duquesne seeks for a pretext to attack, i 248; the Acadians a ceaseless annoyance and menace to, i 254, capture Beauséjour, i 257-261, all Acadia now in the hands of, i 262; their losses in the battle of Lake George, i 323, 324, the Niagara expedition, ii 4; its failure, ii 11, results of the entire campaign, ii 14, Acadia lost to, ii 14, Johnson seeks to attack the Five Nations to the interest of, ii 77; the Five Nations pledge themselves to, ii 78, plan to attack Louisbourg, ii 157, their delays, ii 157.
- English colonies, the, i 22; reasons for the success of, i 23, more populous and wealthy than the French, i 132.
- English fur-traders, i 40; welcomed by the savages of the Ohio, i 45, among the Shawanoes, i 48; at Logstown, i 50; on the shores of the Ohio, i 54, at Piquet Town, i 60, among the Miamis, i 84, accusations against, i 85, spare no pains to win over the Indians, i 87; at Pickawillany, i 88.
- English Indians, the, iii 220.
- English land speculators, i 40
- English of Oswego, the, i 56, 74
- English rangers, ii 214
- Entick, i. 188, 191; on the engagement between the French and English fleets, i 193; on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, on the pressure brought to force the Pennsylvania Assembly to pass measures of war, ii 34, on the destruction of Fort Bull, ii 62, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161; on the British naval officers, ii 255; on the size of the English force in the Louisbourg expedition, ii 261; on Boscowen's determination to land at Louisbourg, ii 262, on the English landing at Louisbourg, ii 266, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287, on Ticonderoga, ii 314, on Wolfe, iii 35; on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 205; on the arrogance of Pitt, iii 241; on the capture of Havana, iii 248.
- Erie, Lake, i 41, 55, 80, 85, 93, 137; iii 90.
- Erie, town of, i 93, 133
- Esopus, ii 109
- Espagnol, Port, Major Dalling sent to occupy, ii 284
- Espumense, Madame d', see Montcalm, Mademoiselle de
- Estêbe, trial of, ii 241
- Estève, Montcalm's secretary, ii 47, 50

- Etchemin River, the, iii. 117
 Etchemins, the, i. 26
 Eugene, Prince, i. 21
 Europe, trembling with the coming earthquake, ii. 39
 European seas, the, English successes in, iii. 247
 "Entreprenant," the, at Louisbourg, ii. 259; burned, ii. 272
 Eyre, Major, in the battle of Lake George, i. 317, takes possession of Fort William Henry, ii. 127, 128; on the strength of the garrison, ii. 136, called upon by Rigaud to surrender, ii. 137, he refuses, ii. 137, his report to London, ii. 139.
- FAILLON, on the wreck of the "Auguste," iii. 230
 Fairfax, Lord, letter from Dinwiddie to, i. 144, note from Innes to, i. 235, 237.
 Falmouth, Shirley at, i. 175, Diekau at, i. 322 See also Portland.
 "Family Compact," the, iii. 242, provisions of, iii. 242.
 Faneul Hall, in Boston, iii. 223
 Faubourg St. Germain, the, i. 16
 "Feather dance," the, i. 61
 Ferdinand VI, of Spain, death of, iii. 242
 Ferdinand of Brunswick, Prince, placed in command of the German troops, ii. 252; drives Clermont out of Hanover, ii. 252; iii. 246
 Ferguson, Captain, at Louisbourg, ii. 262
 Feudalism, robbed of its vitality, i. 12
 Feudal proprietorship, odious to the democratic nature of Franklin, ii. 24.
- "Fidèle," the, at Louisbourg, ii. 259
 Fiedmont, Captain, at Quebec, iii. 156, 159
 Fielding, Henry, i. 9, 196
 Fireships at Quebec, iii. 52
 Fitch, Colonel, on the Indian raids, ii. 75
 Fitch's provincial regiment at Ticonderoga, ii. 301, 303
 Five Nations, the, in the Ohio valley, i. 43, a power of high importance, i. 67, joined by the Tuscaroras, i. 67, Joncaire intrigues to gain them for the French, i. 67; i. 72, declared by the treaty of Utrecht to be British subjects, i. 130, William Johnson's wonderful influence over, i. 179, 298, attend the convention at Albany, i. 179; ask that William Johnson be restored to the management of Indian affairs, i. 181, held up as an example of confederation, i. 182, i. 210; look with favor on William Johnson, i. 297, called in council by Johnson, i. 299, forest homes of, ii. 4; trading at Albany, ii. 5; Shirley holds conferences with, ii. 12, set on by Dumas to attack the border settlements, ii. 14, their power and pride greatly fallen, ii. 58, Johnson seeks to attach them to the English interest, ii. 77, unable to remain neutral, ii. 77, pledge themselves to the English, ii. 78, Shirley longs for their aid against Niagara and Frontenac, ii. 80, half won for France, ii. 155; Vaudreuil's plan to force them to declare for France, ii. 292; nearly lost to the English,

- ii 335, wavering, ii 351, 352, attend the convention at Easton, ii 356, iii 86, in the attack on Oswego, iii 264 See also Hogwarts Indians, and Six Nations, the Five-Mile Point, ii 130, 308
 Flanders, Wolfe at, iii 25
 Flanagan, on Choiseul, iii 211, on the "Family Compact," iii 243
 Flatheads, the, i 72
 Flat Point, ii 262, 263.
 Flat Point Cove, ii 266
 Fleummont, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
 Florence, iii 168
 Florida, i 22, ceded to England by Spain, iii 252
 Fohgny, M de, on the fireships at Quebec, iii 52, on the siege of Quebec, iii 57, on the repulse of the English at Montmoroni, iii 76, iii 119, 128; on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, iii 130, on the loss of Montcalm, iii 151, iii 287, on the burial of Montcalm, iii 291.
 Folsom, Captain, at Fort Lyman, i 320.
 Fontbrune, sent to summon Monro to surrender, ii 187.
 Fontenoy, Duke of Cumberland at, i 10, i 22
 Forbes, Rev Eli, rejoices over the fall of Canada, iii 224
 Forbes, Brigadier John, in command of the expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 254, leads an expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 337, sketch of, ii 340; his army, ii 340, conflicting views, ii 341, his plan of advance, ii 342, displeased with his provincials, ii 343; in Philadelphia, ii 343, letters to Bouquet, ii 343, 344, 345, 346, 351, 363, 365, 366, vexed with the Pennsylvania Assembly, ii 344, at Carlisle, ii 344, his illness, ii 344, 345, his imputations against Washington, ii 345, his relations with the Indians, ii 347, trouble-some allies, ii 347, 348, his ignorance of the strength of the enemy, ii 348, his advance, ii 349, the object of his long delays, ii 350, wavering allies, ii 351, ii 358, 359, 360, on Grant's defeat, ii 363, ii 364, his advance against Fort Duquesne, ii 367, finds it deserted, ii 368; the homeward march, ii 369, advises Amherst of his success, ii 370, death of, ii 371, importance of his work, ii 371, iii 86.
 Forbes, Thomas, journal of, i 165, 216
 Forest outposts, i 74
 Fort Hill, ii 282
 Fort William Henry Hotel, ii 88, 192
 "Foudroyant," the, captured by the "Monmouth," ii 255.
 Fox, Henry, i 10; letter from Dinwiddie to, i 184, i 186, letters from Shirley to, ii 62, 70, 81, 83, 86, 93, on Shirley's successor, ii 70, on Johnson's commission, ii 77, letters from London to, ii 81, 87, 93
 Foxcroft, Rev Thomas, rejoices over the fall of Canada, iii 224.
 Foxes, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
 France, Louis XV, breaks the traditionary policy of, i 4, American possessions of, i 5; ruined by the Seven Years

War, in two continents, i 5, House of Bourbon, holds the throne of, i 12, her claims, i 12; nobility of England, compared with that of, i 13, prodigious influence of women in, i 14, signs of decay, i 14, the court, i 15; the clergy, i 15, the people, i 15, 16, an aggregate of disjointed parts, i 16, attempt to scour heresy out of, i 16, her manifold ills summed up in the King, i 16, influence of Madame de Pompadour on, i 17, decline of the monarchy, i 18, supports the claims of the Elector of Bavaria, i 21, her claims in America, i 22, builds its best colony on a principle of exclusion, i 24, her claims to Canada, i 27, Galssonière the chief representative of the American policy in, i 39, in the Ohio valley, i 43, 44; cedes Acadia to England, i 95, Louisbourg restored by England to, i 95, tries to turn the Acadians from England, i 99, the question of American boundaries between England and, i 128, Madame de Pompadour the true ruler of, i 186, military and naval strength of, i 187, weak in leadership, i 187, policy of, i 187, prepares an expedition for America, i 189, mutual dissimulation, i 190, admits that the Kennebec River belongs to England, i 190, the possession of Acadia necessary to, i 246, her chances of success good, i 247, Acadian exiles in, i 294, England declares war against, ii 38, declares war against England, ii

38; England seeks a guarantee against, ii 39, Maria Theresa courts the alliance of, ii 40, is made the instrument of Austria, ii 40, joins Austria and Russia against Prussia, ii 41, 243; henceforth to turn her strength against her European foes, ii 41, reasons for this, ii 41, 42, her policy, ii 42, the Indians at the beck of, ii 58, conquers the undisputed command of Lake Ontario, ii 102, hastens to protect Louisbourg against an English attack, ii 157, weakness of the government in, ii 249, in sore need of peace, iii 239, tries to seize Hanover, iii 246, its navy reduced to helplessness, iii 247; desperate financial condition of, iii 249; her cessions to Great Britain by the Peace of Paris, iii 251, moving swiftly towards ruin, iii 256, effect of Colbert on, iii 257, loses her grand opportunities as a world-power, iii 257

Franklin, Benjamin, i 30, 173, his famous project of union, i 182, his plan rejected by the Crown, i 182, his estimate of Braddock, i 195, a powerful ally of Braddock, i 205, his antagonism to the Penns, i 206, visits Braddock's camp, i 206, enables Braddock to begin his march, i 206, 207, i 234, 236, leader in the Pennsylvania Assembly, ii 24, the idea of feudal proprietorship odious to, ii 24, ii 27, 31, 34, 35, 36, his opinion of Shirley, ii 108, his opinion of London, ii 108, 153; on the jealousy of the colonies, iii 250

- Franquet, the engineer, on the Acadians, i 269, sent to strengthen Louisbourg, ii 222, his journal, ii 222, on Bigot, ii 222, in council at Louisbourg, ii 276, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287
- Frasco, the trader, the French seize the house of, i 138, i 142, 221
- Fraser, Colonel, at Quebec, iii 68, on the repulse of the English at Montmorenci, iii 76, on the cruelty of Montgomery, iii 105, on the force of the English and French at the battle of Quebec, iii 142, on the capture of Le Calvaire, iii 182, at Ste-Foy, iii 196, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 204, on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii 286; on the siege of Quebec, iii 289; on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 292.
- Fraser, Hon Malcolm, iii 141.
- Fraser's Highlanders, at Louisbourg, ii 264; at Quebec, iii 73, 74, 129, 136, 144; suffer from the Canadian winter, iii 180; attack the French skirmishers, iii 181; at Ste-Foy, iii 196, 286
- Frederic II of Prussia, i 4; severe apprenticeship of, i 19, the first warrior of his time, i 20; seizes Silesia, i 21; draws an avalanche upon himself, i 39; hatred of Elizabeth, Maria Theresa, and Madame de Pompadour for, ii 39, a rebellious vassal of the Holy Roman Empire, ii 39; robs Maria Theresa of Silesia, ii 39; a veritable fire-king, ii 243, begins the Continental war, ii 243; England makes common cause with, ii 243, wins the battle of Piague, ii 244, defeated at Kolin, ii 244, wins at Rossbach, ii 245, defeats the Austrians at Leuthen, ii 245, Madame de Pompadour never wavers in her spite against, ii 250, his tribute to Pitt, ii 251, seemed tottering to his ruin, iii 233, reverses of, iii 233, his letters to D'Aigens, iii 234, 235, his letter to Voltaire, iii 234, his unconquerable spirit, iii 235, domestic losses, iii 235, his campaign of 1760, iii 235; his campaign of 1761, iii 236; the fall of Pitt a knell of doom to, iii 246, Peter III of Russia becomes his friend, iii 246, on the loss of life in the Continental War, iii 256, succeeds in defying his adversaries, iii 256.
- Frederic, Fort, i 26, ii 64. See also Crown Point
- Frederick Louis, Prince of Wales (eldest son of George II), i 10.
- Friederic Wilham, King of Germany, makes Germany the best engine of war in Europe, i 19.
- Frémont, M., at Oswego, ii 149
- French, the, Miamis refuse to listen to, i 60, 61; Oswego of ill omen to, i 77; plot to destroy Oswego, i 82, 83, perils of, i 87, 88, destroy Canseau, i 97; never reconciled to the loss of Acadia, i 97; dread Fort Halifax, i 191, Lawrence and Shirley plan against, i 248, 249, heartlessness of their dealings with the Acadians, i 254, their losses in the battle of Lake George, i 323; capture

- Oswego, ii 93, think to crush
 Frederic of Prussia at Rossbach, ii 245; elated by the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii 102; flee before
 Frederic of Prussia, iii 233
- French Academy, the, Montcalm's ambition to become a member of, ii 43.
- French America, two heads of, i 42; Vaudreuil the new governor of, i 189
- French, the Canadian, prepare to defend Crown Point, i 299
- "French Catharine's Town," i 58
- French colonies, the, causes of failure of, i 23, the English colonies more populous and wealthy than, i 132
- French Creek, i 48, 133, 135, 138, 139, 174
- French Indians, the, i 62, 141, in the battle of Lake George,
 i 318; in the siege of Niagara,
 in 90
- French Mountain, the heights of,
 i 311, 320, ii 298
- French ports, in the West, i 4, 200.
- French priests, the, persuade the Acadians to break faith with England, i 95; indignation of Cornwallis towards, i 111; the proposition to replace, i 112.
- French Revolution, the, i. 20.
- Freshwater Cove, ii 262, 263,
 Wolfe attempts to land at, ii 264, the defence of the French at, ii 264
- Frontenac, Fort, i 41; Bienville at, i 55; Father Piquet at, i 72, reason for building, i 77, reception of Father Piquet at,
 i. 78, ii 8, location of, ii 9;
- French force at, ii 9, 10; French camp at, ii 59, French engineers strengthen the defences of, ii 60, guarded by the battalions of Guienne and La Saire, ii 62, Shirley's plan to seize, ii 68, 80, 86, Loudon abandons
 the attempt against, ii 87;
 Montcalm at, ii 95, ii 102, falls into British hands, ii 334, 335, baffles Shirley in his attempt against Niagara, ii 335; gives Montcalm the means of conquering Oswego, ii 335, Bradstreet's expedition against,
 ii 335, De Noyan in command at, ii 335, surrenders to Bradstreet, ii 335, destroyed, ii 336, importance of possessing,
 ii 336
- Frontiers, the, misery of, ii 17;
 the nature of, ii 19, petition for protection, ii 25, 28
- Fry, Colonel Joshua, in command of the Virginia regiment, i 147, 150, dangerous illness of, i. 156, death of, i 157
- Frye, Major, i 285, attacked by Boishébert, i 286, on Chaplain
 Weld, ii 92, on Marin's dash on Fort Edward, ii 173; sent to Fort William Henry, ii 185, 191, 197, his escape from the Indians, ii 199, 200; his letter to Governor Pownall, ii 202;
 on the attack on Fort Wilham
 Henry, iii 276, 277
- Fuentes, Count de, on the arrogance of Pitt, iii 241
- Fundy, Bay of, i. 246, 248, 256, 268, 270, 277, Monckton despatched to, ii 284, ii 285
- Fur-trade, the, i 40, at Albany,
 ii 5
- Fur-traders, i 40, 45, 74, 77

- GABARUS' BAY, Boscawen sails into, ii 262
- Gage, Lieutenant-Colonel, i 220, 222; in the battle of Monongahela, i 223, 224, wounded, i 227, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, i 232, with Abercrombie, ii 299, letter from Amherst to, iii 83, sent to supersede Johnson, iii 91
- Galissonière, see La Galissonière
- Gallows Hill, seized by Wolfe, ii 271
- Galops, the, Amherst descends, iii 217
- Galt, ii 369
- Ganouskie Bay, ii 178
- Gardiner, Captain, of the "Monmouth," ii 255, his fight with the "Foudroyant," ii 255, death of, ii 255
- Gardiner, Richard, on the siege of Quebec, iii 288.
- Gardner, death of, ii 131
- Garneau, on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 293.
- Gaspé, ii 286, iii 200
- Gaspé, county of, i 131.
- Gaspé, De, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156; on Bigot's life and character, ii 225
- Gaspereau, Fort, at Baye Verte, i 262, summoned to surrender, i 262; surrenders, i 262
- Gates, Horatio, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i 227, letter from Macaulay to, ii 338.
- "General Court," the, at Boston, i 28
- General Hospital, the, at Quebec, iii 108, 149, 175, 180, 290
- Genesee River, the, Father Piquet at, i 76
- "Gentleman's Magazine," i 204; on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, on the Niagara expedition, ii 12, on the Pennsylvanian disputes, ii 37, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161, ii 334, on Giant's defeat, ii 363; on Forbes' advance, ii 367, on the question of retaining Canada, iii 251
- George II., prosaic reign of, i 7; the Acadians swear fidelity to, i 95, 96, the Acadians refuse to take the oath of allegiance to, i 275, his opinion of Wolfe, ii 31, death of, iii 237
- George III., becomes King of England, iii 237, characteristics of, iii 237, dislikes Pitt, ii 237, becomes the supporter of the peace party, iii 238, his new cabinet, iii 239, his new policy, iii 239, deposes Newcastle, iii 246, feels the need of peace, iii 249, negotiations opened, iii 249; the question of restoring Canada, iii 250.
- George, Fort, built by Amherst, i 306, ii 282, iii 79, 165; iii 283. See also William Henry, Fort.
- George, Fort, see New Oswego.
- George, Lake, Johnson's march for, i 305; Johnson changes name of Lac St. Sacrament to, i 306, 327, i 310, ii 36, New England mustering against the French at, ii 67; Winslow at, ii 88, 108; the chief centre of partisan war, ii 115, rangers at, ii 120, 121, 123, ii 132, 136, 140, 163, 165, 166, 179, 181, 207, 215, 217, 218, 282, 286, 292, 293, 294, 306, 308, 310, 313, 337; Amherst at, iii 78, 80.

- Georgia, colony of, i 23, 36
- Genain, Reverend Father, i 104, advises the Acadians not to take the oath of allegiance, i 105, i 107, at Beaubassin, i 122, iii 266
- German Flats, the Palatine settlement of, ii 6, Webb at, ii 94, attacked by Vaudreuil, ii 209, destruction of, ii 210, population of, ii 211
- Germanic Empire, the collective, i 19, joins the three powers against Prussia, ii 244; iii 246
- Germans, the, in Pennsylvania, i 33, 34, 172, 200, in New York, i 35, hate the thought of military service, ii 25, demand measures of war from the Assembly, ii 33.
- German States, the smaller, join the three powers against Prussia, ii 244
- Germany, the destinies of, i 19, left by Frederic William the best engine of war in Europe, i 19, Rossbach begins the recreation of, iii 255
- Gethen, Captain, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 236
- Gibraltar, garrison of, i 11, Braddock made governor of, i 197, the fact questioned, i 197
- Gibraltar, the Straits of, ii 254
- Gibson, George, i 236.
- Gibson, J., on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii 76
- Giddings, Captain, on Rogers, ii 331
- Gilchrist, iii 285
- Gnau, priest at Cobequid, i 111, sent prisoner to Halifax, but released, i 111, retires to Isle St Jean, i 111, on the misery of the Acadians, i 114
- Gist, Christopher, i 45; sent to explore the Ohio country, i 57, reaches Logstown, i 57, at Muskingum, i 57, service rendered by Montour to, i 57, on Mary Harris, i 59, at Pickawillany, i 58, among the Miamis, i 60, received by La Demoiselle, i 60, makes a treaty with the Miamis, i 60, describes the "feather dance," i 61, returns to Roanoke, i 62, his report, i 62, journal of, i 62, 137; acts as guide for Washington, i 138, 141, on the Alleghany, i 141, 142, makes a settlement at Laurel Hill, i 151, i 157, a council of war in the house of, i 158
- Gist's settlement, Washington advances to, i 158, Villiers at, i 161, burned by Villiers, i 167, Braddock at, i 232, 234 See also Laurel Hill.
- Givard, iii 275
- Gladwin, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i 227
- Glasgow, Wolfe at, iii 25
- Glazier, Colonel, ii 91
- Glen, Governor, of South Carolina, vexes Dinwiddie, i 183
- Gnadenhutten, Moravian settlement of, burned by the Indians, ii 33
- Goat Island, ii 258
- Godefroy, i. 218, 221, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229
- Goldsmith, Oliver, tells the story of Braddock's sister, i 196.
- "Goodwill," the transport, iii 46.
- Gordon, Mr, ii 91
- Gordon, the engineer, on the French in the Ohio valley, i 44; i 233
- Gorée, the Island of, taken from

- the French, in 247; restored to France, in 252
- Gorham, Captain, in 159.
- Governors, the royal, attitude of, i. 177
- "Governor's Palace," the, at Williamsburg, i. 147, 169
- Gradis and Son, official knavery of, in 227
- Graham, Rev John, diary of, in 90
- Grand Battery, the, at Louisbourg, in 260, abandoned by the French, in 266
- Grand Menan, the, in 23
- Grand Pré, i. 98, 110, 270, Acadian deputies at, i. 274, Winslow at, i. 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 288.
- Grant, Mrs, in 298
- Grant, Mrs Anne, see MacVicar, Anne
- Grant, Ensign, at Louisbourg, in 265.
- Grant, Major, of the Highlanders, in 359, his expedition, in. 359, 360; the attack, in 361; the panic, in 362, defeat of, in 363, captured by the French, in 363.
- Grant, Lieutenant William, on the bravery of the Highlanders at Ticonderoga, in 316.
- Grant's Hill, in 349, 359
- Granville, Earl, letter from Dinwiddie to, i. 183, 184, in 243, his reply to Pitt, in. 244; on the result of the Seven Years' War, in 255
- Granville, Fort, captured by the French and Indians, in 110
- Gray, John, letter from his brother James to, in 6
- Gray, Sergeant James, on the uniforms in the Niagara expedition, in. 6.
- Gray, Thomas, in 129
- "Great Cardinal," the, i. 17.
- Great Carrying Place of the Mohawk, the, Johnson's army at, i. 305, Shirley at, in 6, the English build forts to guard, in 61, Shirley rebuilds the fort at, in 71, 80, Webb at, in 93, Webb burns the forts at, in 94; in 336, in 84
- "Great Commoner," the, see Pitt, William
- Great Company, the, i. 293
- Great Cove, the, settlements in, destroyed by the Indians, in 29.
- Great Kanawha River, the, Bienville at, i. 51.
- Great Lakes, the, i. 130
- Great Meadows, the, Washington at, i. 150, 151, 156, Washington joined by the Indians at, i. 157, the fight at, i. 164; Dunbar at, i. 234.
- Great Miami River, the, i. 53.
- Great Ontario, the, see Ontario.
- Great Savage Mountain, the, i. 213.
- Great West, the, i. 42; the key of, i. 66, opened to English enterprise, in 371
- Green, on the Seven Years' War, in 288.
- Green Bay, i. 89; in. 231.
- Green Mountains, the, in 141.
- Grenada, captured by the English, in. 248; ceded by France, in 252
- Grenadiers, the, at Quebec, in. 73, 74; their losses, in 75, rebuked by Wolfe, in. 102; on the Heights of Abraham, in 133.
- Grenadiers, the French, attack Old Lorette, in 180; at Ste-Foy, in. 193.
- Grenadines, the, ceded by France, in. 252.

Grenville, n. 296, on Wolfe, iii 33
 Girdley, Colonel, ii 89
 Ginguon, Pierre, iii 273
 Guadeloupe, seized by the English, iii 247, 250, restored by the English, iii 252
 Guenne, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i 189, guards Fort Frontenac, ii 62, in the expedition against Oswego, ii 96, at Ticonderoga, ii 165, 310, 315, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 180, at Quebec, iii 72, 74, 119, encamped on the St Charles, iii 128, on the Heights of Abraham, iii 134, 136
 Guinea coast, the, ii 253
 Gumley, Colonel, Braddock's duel with, i 196

HABITANTS, i 81

Hague, village of, ii 116.

Hainaut, the regiment of, Montcalm joins, ii 44

Haldimand, Colonel, at Oswego, iii 84, iii 87.

Hale, George S, ii 91.

Half-King, the, orders the French to leave the country, i 135; his interview with Marin, i 135, accompanies Washington to Fort Le Boeuf, i 138; the French try to win over, i 140, joins Washington, i 151, 152, Washington's council with, i 152, claims to have killed Jumonville, i 156; at the Great Meadows, i 157, stands fast by the English, i 158, holds aloof from Washington, i 166, his comments on the fight at Great Meadows, i 166, his estimate of Washington, i 166

Half-Moon, the New England troops at, ii 71, Winslow's headquarters at, ii 75, ii 140, 326.

Halfway Brook, iii 79.

Haliburton, on the embarkation of the Acadians, i 288

Halifax, i 95, founding of, i 96, the offspring of royal authority, i 97, Acadian deputies at, i 101, harassed by La Jonquiere's Indians, i 103, Hobson governor of, i 117, the authorities not models of international virtue, i 119, i 129; Monckton at, i 203, English militia at, i 247, Governor Lawrence at, i 248, 252, Daudin sent to, i 253, i 264, 265, 270, 272, 289, English rendezvous at, ii 157, 158, 159, ii 204, Boscowen and Amheist at, ii 261, iii 32, 34, 121, 203, 266, 292.

Halifax Council, the, on the absurd claim of Le Loutre, i 126

Halifax, Fort, Duquesne ordered to destroy, i 190, dreaded by the French, i 191

Halifax, Lord, i 10, letters from Dinwiddie to, i 184, 237, at the head of the Board of Trade and Plantations, i 186, on Shirley's successor, ii 70, letter from Winslow to, ii 127

Halket, Lieutenant, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 227

Halket, Major, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 369, on the discomforts of Forbes, ii 370, 371

Halket, Sir Peter, in the battle of Monongahela, i. 224, death of, i 227, death of his son, i 227; ii 369

Halket's regiment, i 208.

Halkett, iii 280.

- Hamilton, Captain, iii. 93.
 Hamilton, Governor, of Pennsylvania, on the English fur-traders, i 45, letter from Bienville to, i 48, sends Croghan to the Wyandot, i 57, 63, letter from Governor Clinton to, i 65, letter from Saint Pierre sent to, i 140, powerless against his Assembly, i 147, letter from Colonel Innes to, i 164, letter from Dinwiddie to, i 171, presents circular letter from the Earl of Holderness to his Assembly, i 172; the Assembly refuses to respond to his requests, i 173, succeeded by Morris, i 173
 Hampton, Braddock lands at, i 194, 198.
 Hanbury, John, the Quaker merchant, a member of the Ohio Company, i 57, letters from Dinwiddie to, i 145, 149, Braddock's blunder ascribed to, i 204, consulted by Newcastle on American affairs, i 204.
 Hanbury, Miss, i 149
 Hancock, the Boston merchant, i 254
 Handfield, Major, in command at Annapolis, i 276; ordered to seize the Acadians, i 276; his report, i 285, letter from Winslow to, i 288.
 Hanover, the vulnerable part for which England was always trembling, ii 39; an apple of discord, ii. 245, Ferdinand drives Clermont out of, ii 252; Continental kingdom of, iii. 237; France tries to seize, iii. 246
 Hanover, the House of, i 7, ii. 254.
 Hardy, Sir Charles, governor of New York, ii 70, his representations of Shirley's conduct, ii 70, letter from Abercrombie to, ii 83; on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, ii 158, 286.
 Hardy, Major, at Quebec, iii. 58, 61.
 Harris, John, on the Indian massacres on the Susquehanna, ii. 29
 Harris, Mary, story of, i 58, 59
 Harris, Thomas, an English scout, at the ruins of Oswego, ii. 103.
 Haslet, Captain, i 216
 Hauteur-de-la-Potence, ii 271
 Havana, English attack planned on, iii 247, Albemarle and Pococke attack, iii 248; in English hands, iii 248
 Haviland, Captain, in command at Fort Edward, ii 215, letter from Pringle to, ii 219, iii 207, 208, 211, 212, 213; at Isle-aux-Noix, iii 214, 215
 Hawke, Sir Edward, intercepts a French fleet bound for America, ii 256
 Hawley, Captain Elisha, death of, i 313, 322
 Hawley, Joseph, i 313
 Hay, Sir Charles, ii 159.
 Hay, Ensign, killed at Fort Beau-séjour, i 260
 Hazard, i 212; on Fort Duquesne, i 216, 220, on the destruction of Kittanning, ii. 113
 "Hazard's Pennsylvania Register," on Grant's defeat, ii 363
 Hazen, Captain Moses, in the attack on Fort Beau-séjour, i 258; ii. 115; at Lorette, iii. 182, exploits of, iii 182, 183; wounded at Ste-Foy, iii. 196; anecdote of, iii 196, 197.

- Haven's rangers, exploits of, in 182, 183, at Ste-Foy, in 193, 195
- Hebecourt, Captain, at Ticonderoga, in 214, takes his revenge on Rogers, in 215, reinforced by the Mission Indians, in 215, his account of Rogers' fight, in 220, left at Ticonderoga, in 80, escape of, in 81.
- Henderson, on the Heights of Abraham, in 140
- Hendrick, chief of the Mohawks, complains of his wrongs, in 178, pacified by William Johnson, in 178, attends the convention at Albany, in 180, his speech at the Convention, in 180, at Fort Lyman, in 312; at the Drowned Lands, in 313; death of, in 314, 320
- Hening, in 145; on Dinwiddie's disputes with the Burgesses, in 171
- Hensay, Florence, the French spy in London, in 157
- Herbin, at Montcalm's grand council, in 175; in command at Le Calvaire, in 182; put to flight by the English, in 182
- Herkimer, Fort, in 210
- Hermitage, the, in 226
- "Héros," the, in 49.
- Hertel, at Montcalm's grand council, in 175
- Highlanders, the, in 86, with Abercrombie, in 299; their bravery at Ticonderoga, in 315, in 340, in 25
- Highlanders of Montgomery's regiment, the, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, in 340, in Grant's expedition, in 359, 360, 361, 362; in 367, 368
- Highlands of the Hudson, the, in 206
- "Historical Magazine," on the massacre at Fort William Henry, in 203; on Roubaud, in 170
- Hobbs, Captain, at Fort Edward, in 280, 282
- Hocquant, Captain, in command of the "Alcide," in 192, attacked by the "Dauphin," in 192, 193, his account of the engagement, in 193, on the dwellings of the Acadians, in 268
- Hodges, Captain, ambushed by Canadians and Indians, in 116.
- Hogarth, in 9
- Holbourne, Admiral Francis, ordered to intercept the French expedition for Canada, in 191, in command of the English fleet sent against Louisbourg, in 157, at Halifax, in 159, the expedition abandoned, in 160, his fleet seriously damaged by a hurricane, in 160, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, in 161
- Holdernessee, Earl of, Secretary of State, circular letter from, in 172, letter from Dinwiddie to, in 184, letter from Sewell to, in 322, letter from Loudon to, in 205, letter from Wolfe to, in 114, 115, in 204, supplanted by the Earl of Bute, in 239
- Holdernessee, Lady, in 204.
- Holdernessee, Lady Emily, in 204.
- Holland, in 129, 258
- Holland, Lieutenant, in 93
- Holmes, Admiral, at Quebec, in 32, 106, 107, 116, 117, 122, 123, 124, 126, 128
- Holy Roman Empire, the, in 19; Frederic the Great a rebellious vassal of, in 39
- Hoops, Adam, on the Indian massacres, in 29

- Hoover, Jacob, i 233
 Hoover, Michael, i 233.
 Hopkins, Lieutenant, at Louisbourg, ii 265
 Hopson, succeeds Cornwallis as governor of Halifax, i 108, description of, i 117, his order to his military subordinates, i 117, his considerate treatment of the Acadians, i 117, i 266
 Hospital battery, the, at Quebec, iii 50
 Hospital nuns, the, iii 64; Knox on, iii 175, above praise, iii 176.
 Hôtel-Dieu, the, at Quebec, iii 108, 173
 Hôtel-Dieu nuns, the, see Hospital nuns, the
 "Hot Stuff," written by Edward Botwood, iii 76
 Houllicre, commander of the regulars at Louisbourg, ii 259, in council at Louisbourg, ii 276, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287.
 House of Burgesses, the, see Burgesses, the House of "Howard," i 9.
 Howe, Captain Edward, detested by Le Loutre, i 123, treacherously murdered by Le Loutre's Indians, i 123, 124; in command of the "Dunkirk," i 192; attacks and captures the "Alcide," i 192, 193
 Howe, Colonel, iii 126; on the Heights of Abraham, iii 133.
 Howe, Brigadier Lord, reaches German Flats too late, ii 210; with Abercrombie, ii 253, the real commander of the Ticonderoga expedition, ii 295; estimates of, ii 296, sketch of, ii 296; anecdotes of, ii 297; before Ticonderoga, ii 299, 300; death of, ii 303, his death the ruin of fifteen thousand, ii 304; effect of his death, ii 305, warmly in favor of Bradstreet's expedition, ii 335
 Hoyt, on the battle of Lake George, i 328, 329, on the sufferings of Rogers' rangers, iii 101
 Hubbard, Thomas, iii 276
 Hubertsburg, the treaty of, iii 254.
 Hudson Bay, i 22
 Hudson River, the, i 31, 35, 200, 300, ii 4, 6, 71, 75, 109, 140, 162, 205, 323, iii 4, 83
 Huguenot French, the, in New York, i 35
 Huguenots, the, Louis XV revives the persecution of, i 16, i 24
 Hughes, at Ticonderoga, ii 306
 Humanitarianism, New England, i 294
 "Humphrey Chucker," i 185.
 Humphreys, the biographer of Putnam, ii 331; on Putnam's adventures, ii 334
 Hungarian nobles, the, devotion for Maria Theresa, i 22
 Hungary, Queen of, iii 236.
 "Hunter," the, at Quebec, iii 131.
 Huron, Lake, i 80, 131
 Huron Indians, the, i 45, 61, 130, join the French against the English, i 159, sent to the defence of Fort Duquesne, ii 350
 Hurons of Detroit, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.
 Hurons of Lorette, the, at Fort Duquesne, i 216; ii 58; barbarities of, ii 353, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
 Huske, map of, shows British claims in America, i 131.
 Hutchins, Ensign, iii 93, 115.

Hutchinson, on the conduct of Governor Shirley, i 175, on the fate of the Acadians, i. 293, on cannibalism among the Indians, ii 208.

ILLINOIS, the, militia of, at Loyalhannon, ii 364, iii 86, 91.

Illinois Colony, the, maps of, i 44

Illinois Indians, the, i 43, leagu- ing with the Osages, i 88; i 130

Illinois River, plains of, i 59; ii. 350

"Illustre," the, ii 49

Imperialists, the, think to crush Frederic of Prussia at Ross- bach, ii 245

"Imperial Magazine," the, iii 161

India, England gains the mastery of, i 6, France disputes with England the mastery of, i 12, convulsed by the war between England and France, ii 39, ris- ing French colonies in, ii 42; English successes in, ii 251, French losses in, iii 252.

Indians, the, in the Ohio valley, i 43, give great trouble to Halifax, i 105, invited by Din- widdie to meet him at Winches- ter, i. 146, the British Cabinet urges the colonies to make treaties with, i. 178, despised by Braddock, i 210, at Fort Cumberland, i 211; in the battle of Monongahela, i 223- 231, their losses, i. 231, at Crown Point, i 308, a source of annoyance to Dieskau, i 308, in the battle of Lake George, i 318, 320, 324, at the beck of France, ii 58, divination among, ii 126; their war-feasts, ii 168, cannibalism among, ii 171, 207, 208. For individual tribes see also.

Abenakis, Algonquins,
Catawbas,
Caughnawagas,
Cayugas,
Cherokees,
Chickasaws,
Choctaws,
Delawares,
Detroits,
Dogs,
Eteohémins,
Five Nations,
Foxes,
Hurons,
Illinois,
Iowas,
Iroquois,
Malicites,
Menomines,
Miamiis,
Micmacs,
Mingoes,
Mississagas,

Mohawks,
Mohegans, Neutrals,
Nipissings,
Ohios,
Ojibwas,
Oneidas,
Onondagas,
Osages,
Ottawas,
Penobscots,
Frankishaws,
Pottawattamies,
Sacs,
St Francis,
Saut St Louis,
Senecas,
Shawanoes,
Six Nations,
Tuscaroras,
Twightwees,
Wabreches,
Winnebagoes,
Wyandots

Indians of Canada, the, trading at Albany, ii 5

Indians of Nova Scotia, the, plan to attack the English settlements, i 249

Indian traders, rarely models of virtue, i 45

Indies, the, iii 243

Independents, the, in New York, i. 35

Intendant's Palace, the, at Quebec, ii 225

Inverawe, castle of, ii 299; iii. 281, legend of, iii. 281-285

Inverness, town of, iii 25

Iowas, the, at Ticonderoga, ii 166, at Montcalm's grand coun- cil, ii 174

Ipswich, ii 322

Irish, the, in Pennsylvania, i 33 34

Irish traders, the, i 57.

- Ireland, i 198, bold attempt to invade, iii 247
- Iroquois Indians, the, i 41, in the Ohio valley, i 43; village of, i 49, their legend of Christ, i 58, a power of high importance, i 67, towns of, i 70, to be agents of the French in destroying Oswego, i 82, 83, declared by the treaty of Utrecht to be British subjects, i 130, profess devotion to the French, i 135, with Dieskan, i 314, in Piquet's war party, iii 263. See also Five Nations, the
- Iroquois ladies, the, Montcalm's impressions of, ii 59
- Iroquois of Caughnawaga, the, ii 58, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
- Iroquois of La Présentation, the, join the French against the English, i 159, ii 58, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
- Iroquois of the Ohio, the, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i 144
- Iroquois of the Two Mountains, the, ii 58, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174
- Iroquois towns, the, i 70
- Irwin, Lieutenant, ii 320
- Island Battery, at Louisbourg, ii 260; the English open fire on, ii 267, silenced by Wolfe, ii 269
- Isle-au-Castor, ii 224
- Isle aux-Coudres, DuRoi's fleet arrives at, iii 39, ordered to be evacuated, iii 41; Wolfe's plan to fortify, iii 103
- Isle aux-Noix, iii 18, 36, Bourlamaque at, iii 80, 81, 92, iii 83, its fortifications, iii 92; ii 91, 95, 108, 152, Bougainville at, iii 207, 213; Haviland at, iii 214; abandoned by Bougainville, iii 214
- Isle d'Orleans, ordered to be evacuated, iii 41 See also Orleans, the Island of
- Isle Royale, i 100; Acadian emigration to, i 113, 244 See also, Breton, Cape
- Isle St Jean, i 102, Girard returns to, i 111, Acadian emigration to, i 113, 244, Bonaventure governor of, i 114, i 125, 292, ii 280, 284 See also Prince Edward's Island
- Isle St-Thérèse, Murray at, iii 212
- Italy, Bourbon princes of, iii 243
- Innes, Colonel James, letter to Governor Hamilton from, i 164, in command of the North Carolina regiment, i 168, his letter to Dinwiddie, i 169, in command at Fort Cumberland, i 234, his note to Lord Fairfax, i 235, 237, friendship of Dinwiddie for, ii 17; his opinion of London, ii 158.
- JACK, CAPTAIN, vows vengeance against the Indians, i. 212; coldly received by Braddock, i 212
- Jacobites, the, i 200.
- Jacobs, Captain, the terror of the English border, ii 111, at Kittanning, ii 111; attacked by Armstrong, ii 112; death of, ii 113
- Jacques Cartier, iii 119, 148, 149, 152, 156; Lévis at, iii 162, garrison at, iii 187, Repentigny stationed at, iii 207, iii 209
- James II, tries to unite the northern American colonies, i. 37.

- James River, ii 109
- Jefferson, Thomas, on William and Mary College, i 169
- Jefferys, ii 288
- Jersey, the Island of, i. 261.
- "Jersey Blues," the, in the Niagara expedition, ii 6, in Shirley's new campaign, ii 70
- Jervis, John, see St Vincent, Earl
- Jesuits, the, at Caughnawaga, i 68; missions of, ii 353, at Quebec, iii 50
- Jesuits, the college of the, at Quebec, iii 173
- Jesus Christ, see Christ
- Joannès, Major of Quebec, iii 123, unwilling to surrender Quebec, iii 159, sent to capitulate with Townshend, iii 160, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287
- Johnson, Fort, council at, i 299, ii 6, Indian councils at, ii 78, Johnson sick at, ii 79, ii 103
- Johnson, Sergeant John, on the siege of Quebec, iii 57, on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii 76, on the loyalty of the army to Wolfe, iii 121, on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, iii 130, on the temper of Murray's troops, iii 184, on the fight at Ste-Foy, iii 194, on the condition of Murray's troops, iii 197, on the rashness of Murray, iii 198, on the conduct of the British officers, iii 199, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 204, on the siege of Quebec, iii 289; on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 293
- Johnson, Colonel William, i 66, his skill in managing Indians i 68, his letter to Governor Clinton, i 68, i 77, his anxiety for his safety, i 81, advised of the Ohio expedition, i 93, pacifies Chief Hendrick, i 178, his wonderful influence over the Five Nations, i 179, 298, the Five Nations ask that he be restored to the management of Indian affairs, i 181, in command of the expedition against Crown Point, i 201, made sole superintendent of Indian affairs, i 202, 203, in command of the expedition against Crown Point, i 297, his heterogeneous authority, i 297, sketch of, i. 298, born to prosper, i 298, comparatively a model of uprightness, i 298, his fortified house, i 298; his marriages, i 298, calls a council of the Indians, i 299, encamped near Albany, i 300, his army, i 301, sends to the colonies for reinforcements, i 305, at the Great Carrying Place, i 305; his march for Lake George, i 305, 306; names Lake George, i 306, Dieskau prepares a surprise for, i 307, Dieskau marches against, i 311, Dieskau lays an ambush for, i 313, the attack, i 314, retreats, i 314; the battle of Lake George, i 316-320; wounded, i 317, rout of the French, i 319, protects Dieskau from the Indians, i 320, did not follow up his success i 324, on the French losses in the battle of Lake George, i 324, urged to capture Ticonderoga, i 324, 325, jealous of Lyman, i 325, the Crown Point expedition a failure, i 325, his letter to Phipps, i

- 325, calls a council of war, i. 326, reaps the laurels of his victory, i. 327, accounts, i. 327, ignores Lyman in his report, i. 327, made a haughty by the King, i. 328, correspondence of, i. 328, ii. 4, 9, 11, his falling out with Shirley, ii. 12, Shirley encroaches on his new office of Indian superintendent, ii. 12; inveighs against Shirley's Indian agents, ii. 12, Governor Delancey joins hands against Shirley with, ii. 13; ii. 60, arrives too late to defend Fort Bull, ii. 62, discourages New England by his failure to capture Crown Point, ii. 69; ii. 71; seeks to attach the Five Nations to the English interest, ii. 77; his commission, ii. 77, difficulty of his task, ii. 77; his success, ii. 78; goes to Onondaga, ii. 78; seized with a fever, ii. 79; obstacles to his work, ii. 80; Rogers' report to, ii. 121, ii. 128, 183; joins Webb at Fort Edward, ii. 205; cost to Massachusetts of the expedition of, ii. 290; ii. 294; at Ticonderoga, ii. 311, ii. 351, 352; attends the convention at Easton, ii. 356, in Prideaux's camp, iii. 86; in the siege of Niagara, iii. 87, defeats Aubry, iii. 89, 90, calls on Pouchot to surrender, iii. 90; the terms of capitulation, iii. 91, in Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii. 216, 221.
- Johnson Papers, the, i. 203
- Johnson's Mohawks, i. 300, ii. 216, 221.
- Johnstone, Chevalier, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii. 161; on the siege of Louisbourg, ii. 287; on Abercrombie's blunders, ii. 309; at Quebec, iii. 59, 60, 74, on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii. 76; on Wolfe's desperate plan, iii. 116, iii. 128; on Montcalm's agitation, iii. 131, 135; at St John, iii. 145, 146, on Vandreuil's cowardice, iii. 147, on the retreat of the French, iii. 151, on the last words of Montcalm, iii. 153, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii. 204, on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii. 214, 215, on the siege of Quebec, iii. 289, on the death and burial of Montcalm, iii. 290
- Joncane, Chabert de, i. 47, 48; among the Shawanoes, i. 52, makes anti-English speeches to the Ohio Indians, i. 62, i. 66; intrigues to gain the Five Nations for France, i. 67; at Niagara, i. 74, 75, i. 79; reports the Ohio Indians as on the side of the English, i. 87; in command at Venango, i. 138, gains over most of the Senecas, i. 178; ii. 79, 352; trial of, ii. 241, ii. 352; in command at Little Niagara, iii. 86; his influence with the Indians waning, iii. 86; burns his fort, iii. 86.
- Joncane, Clauzonue, iii. 86.
- Jonquière, see La Jonquière.
- Joseph, Montcalm's servant, ii. 47, 50
- Jumonville, Charlotte Aimable, receives a pension, i. 156.
- Jumonville, Coulon de, death of, i. 153; brings destruction on himself, i. 154; opinions on his conduct, i. 154; pension given

- to the widow of, i. 156; i. 164, 165, opinions on the death of, iii 268-270
- Juniata, the, ii. 110.
- KALM, gives an account of Albany, ii 5, on the presence of the French in America, iii 250
- Kanaouagon River, the, see Cone-wango River, the
- Kanawha River, the, i. 51, 62
- Kanon, fleet of, iii 39, 42, 171.
- Karl, Prince, ii 245.
- Kaskaskia, i 44
- Kaunitz, minister of Maria Theresa, ii 40
- Kennebec River, the, i 30, 175, Shirley builds forts on, i. 190, admitted by the French to belong to the English, i 190; the portage between the Chaudière and, i 199, English settlements east of, i 249, i 255, iii 93
- Kennedy, on the confederation of the colonies, i 182
- Kennedy, Adjutant, at Fort Edward, i 281.
- Kennedy, Captain, iii 98
- Kennedy, Lieutenant, ii. 115, 129, 130, death of, ii 131.
- Kennington Cove, see Freshwater Cove.
- Kensington, ii 87
- Keppel, Commodore, in command of the American squadron, i 194, at Alexandria, i. 198, i 208
- Kikensick, chief of the Nipissings, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 176
- Kilgore, Ralph, i. 84
- Killick, master of the "Goodwill," iii. 46, 47
- King Beaver, receives Post, ii 353.
- King's Bastion, the, at Louisbourg, ii 258, 260, 272, 275
- King's companies, the, from New York, at Alexandria, i 168; in Shirley's new campaign, ii. 70
- Kings, divine right of, i 7.
- Kingston, i 72
- Kirkland, Dr, ii 82
- Kittanning, the Delaware town of, site of, i 48, Armstrong sent to attack, ii 110; the attack, ii. 112; destruction of, ii 113; Armstrong's report, ii 113, Dumas' report, ii 114
- Kloster-Zeven, the convention of, ii 250
- Knox, Captain John, on Le Louvre's character, i 262, on the embarkation of the Acadians, i 291, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161, on the size of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 261, on the English landing at Louisbourg, ii 266, on the reception of the news of the fall of Louisbourg, ii 283, 288; at Fort Cumberland, iii 21, on the provincials in Wolfe's expedition to the St Lawrence, iii 22, in the harbor of Louisbourg, iii. 23, on Wolfe, iii 35; on the French preparations to defend Quebec, iii 37, 42, on board the "Goodwill," iii 46, 48, at the Island of Orleans, iii 49, on the failure of the French fire-ships, iii 53, at Point Levi, iii. 56, 62, on the desertions of the Canadians, iii 64, 65, on Wolfe's severities, iii 68, on Vaudreuil's second attempt to burn the English fleet, iii 68, 69; on the losses of the grenadiers and

- the Royal Americans, ii 75; on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii 76, on Amherst's capture of Ticonderoga, iii 82, on the siege of Niagara, iii 89, on the cruelty of Montgomerie, iii 105, on the illness of Wolfe, iii 109, on the moral force of Wolfe, iii 121, iii 122, on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, iii 130, on the death of Wolfe, iii 141, on the force of the English and French at the battle of Quebec, iii 141, 142, on the last words of Montcalm, iii 153, on the Canadian ladies, iii 174, his quarters at Quebec, iii 174, on the hospital nuns, iii 175, on the Quebec winter, iii 179; on the capture of Le Calvaire, iii 182, on the exploits of Hazen's rangers, iii 183, on the fight at Ste-Foy, iii 195; on the arrival of relief at Quebec, iii 201, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 201, on Murray's advance, iii 209, an excellent lover of the picturesque, iii 210, on Murray at Isle St-Therese, iii 212, on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 214, on the capture of Fort Levis, iii 216, on the losses at Ticonderoga, iii 280; on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii 286, on the death and burial of Montcalm, iii 290, on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 293
- Kolin, Frederic of Prussia defeated at, ii 244
- Kunersdorf, the Prussians defeated at, iii 233
- Kushkushkee, the Delaware town of, Post at, ii 353
- La BAROLON, ii 146
- La Belle Famille, iii 90
- "La Belle Rivière," see Ohio River, the
- La Chine, i, 41, ii 116, 209, 212, Amherst lands at, iii 217, 219
- La Clue, Admiral, ii 254, held imprisoned at Toulon by Osborn, ii 275
- La Colmanière, see Freshwater Cove
- La Corne, Saint-Luc de, i 107, sent with troops to Beaujour, i 120, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 186, 191, 196, 197, ii 328, sent to the St. Lawrence, iii 36, 39, attacks Prideaux, iii 85, wounded, iii 85, iii 207, 217, sails for France, iii 230; shipwrecked, iii 231, his wonderful escape, iii 231
- La Demoiselle, chief of the Miramis, i 51, his interview with Bienville, i 54, receives Gist, i 60, makes a treaty with the English, i 60, refuses to listen to the French, i 60, 61, a moving spirit of disaffection, i 88, attacked by Langlade, i 89, boiled and eaten by the victors, i 90
- Ladies, the Canadian, iii 174.
- La Fare, Marquis de, ii 44
- La Frépoune, ii 228
- La Gaiette, Father Piquet's mission, iii 215
- La Galissonnière, Marquis de, governor of Canada, i 23, 24, sketch of, i 39; the chief representative of the American policy in

- France, i 39, sends Bienville into the valley of the Ohio, i 40, his message to the Senecas, i 47, honorably recalled, i 82, French commissioner on the question of American boundaries between France and England, i 128, 129
- La Haye, i 276
- Lainé, ii 232
- Laud, Matthew, i 233
- La Jonquière, Marquis de, governor of Canada, i 45, 69, Father Piquet's letter to, i 71, on Toronto, i 74, his estimate of Bienville, i 81, succeeds La Galissonnière, i 82, characteristics of, i 82, instructed to destroy Oswego, i 83, correspondence between Governor Clinton and, i 83, 84, advises building forts near Lake Erie, i 85, his advice rejected, i 85, troubles of, i 85, 86, complains against Bienville, i 86, death of, i 86, i 88, 89, the determined adversary of the English, i 99, his despatch on the required Acadian oath of allegiance, i 102, 103, encourages the Acadians to seek asylum on French soil, i 103, harasses the English of Halifax, i 103, letters from Le Loutre to, i 103, his covert war, i 104, 105, 107, 108, on the English occupation of Beaubassin, i 120, on the landing of Lawrence at Beaubassin, i 121; strange proclamation of, i 126, on the troupes de la marine, ii 56, receives instructions for the destruction of Oswego, iii 264, on Le Loutre, iii 267, on having the Acadians join the Indians against the English, iii 267.
- Lake George, the battle of, i 302, 316-320, losses in, i 323
- Lake of Two Mountains Indians, the, join the French against the English, i 159
- Lakes, the, iii 95, 208
- Lakes, the northern, i 217
- Lalande, on the Abbé Piquet, i 71
- Lalorne, the missionary, at Beaubassin, i 122
- "La Liberté," ii 145
- La Molé, iii 170
- La Motte, Admiral Dubois de, ordered to Canada, i 189, 192, at Louisbourg, ii 159, 160
- La Motte, Captain, iii 146
- "La Mutine," the French frigate, i 106
- Lancaster, i 207, 236, iii 224
- L'Ange Gardien, the parish of, iii. 58, burned by Wolfe, iii 104
- Langis, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
- Langlade, Charles, at Detroit, i 89, attacks the Demoiselle, i 89, takes his captive traders to Duquesne, i 90, highly praised by Duquesne, i 90, i 217, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175, the partisan, at Quebec, iii 59, letter from Vaudrenil to, iii 218, author of Braddock's defeat, iii 273.
- Languedoc, ii 144.
- Languedoc, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i 189, captured by the English, i 193, i 310, at Ticonderoga, ii 62, 66; Lévis in command of, ii 165, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 179; at Ticonderoga, ii 310, at Quebec, iii 135
- Langy, ii 293, at Ticonderoga, ii 294, 300, 301, 302, attacks Howe's column, ii 303.

- La Paille Coupée, Seneca village of, i 47
- La Pansé, M. de, iii 219, 220.
- La Perade, Chevalier de, at Fort Duquesne, i 218.
- La Plante, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
- La Prairie, ii 145
- La Présentation, Piquet's mission of, i 69, location of, i 69, description of, i 70; i. 74, 75, 79, ii 58, Amherst's expedition at, iii 215, ii 353
- La Reine, the battalion of, ordered to Canada, i 189, captured by the English, i 193, i 310, at Ticonderoga, ii 62, Lévis in command of, ii 165, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 179; at Ticonderoga, ii 310
- La Rochebeaucourt, M. de, see Beaucour, La Roche
- La Sarre, the regiment of, destined for Canada, ii 49; guards Fort Frontenac, ii 62; in the expedition against Oswego, ii 96; Lévis in command of, ii 165, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 180; at Ticonderoga, ii 310; at Quebec, iii 135
- Lascelles' regiment, at Quebec, iii. 75, 76
- La Suède, iii 187
- "La Superbe," ii 145.
- Lauder, Sir Thomas Dick, on the legend of Ticonderoga, iii 281
- Laurel Hill, Washington at, i 150; Gist makes a settlement at, i. 151, 157, Villiers at, i. 161, ii 349, 350.
- La Vallière, on the fight at Beaubassin, i. 122, on the murder of Howe, i. 124.
- Lawrence, Major Charles, succeeds
- Hopson as governor of Halifax, i 118, sent to Beaubassin with troops, i 121, re-embarks, i 121; returns to Beaubassin, i 121, defeats Le Loutre and his Indians, i 122; i 126, plots against the French, i 199, on the French designs against the English, i 248, sends Monckton to Boston, i 248, Shirley offers to assist him against the French, i 249; active preparations, i 254; i 266, characteristics of, i 266, on the obstinacy of the Acadians, i 267, exacts an unqualified oath of allegiance from the Acadians, i. 270; the Acadians refuse to take the oath, i 273; determined to reduce the Acadians to compliance, i 273, orders Monckton to seize the Acadians, i 276, his instructions to Winalow, i 279, 280, his disposition of the Acadians, i 292, ii 253; reconnoitres at Louisbourg, ii. 262; makes a landing, ii 265; iii 34, 76.
- Lawrence, Fort, i 123, 125, 126, French designs upon, i. 248, 250, Monckton at, i 257.
- Learned, Captain, ii 92.
- Le Bâtard, Étienne, lures Captain Howe into an ambush, i 123.
- Le Bœuf, Fort, i 133; the Half-King at, i 135, i 136; Saint-Pierre arrives at, i 136, Washington at, i. 139, 148, 221, 308, ii 369, iii 87; burned by the French, iii 90
- Le Borgne, Chevalier, ii. 232; iii. 272.
- Le Brun, the frescoes of, i. 14.
- Le Calvaire, French post at, iii. 182, captured by MacDonald, iii 182

- Legge, Chancellor of the Exchequer, iii. 239
- Le Guerne, missionary at Fort Cumberland, on the conjugal devotion of the Acadians, i. 291
- Le Loutre, Louis Joseph, Vicar General of Acadia and missionary to the Micmacs, i. 103, his letters to La Jonquière, i. 103, i. 104; advises the Acadians not to take the oath of allegiance, i. 105, engaged by Desherbiers to distribute gifts among the Indians, i. 107; his mission, i. 108, keeps the Acadians in allegiance to King Louis, i. 109; receives a pension, i. 109, chief agent in stimulating Acadian emigration, i. 113, 114, sketch of, i. 118, the most conspicuous person in the province, i. 118, a despot towards the Acadians, i. 118, his masterful dealing with the Acadian clergy, i. 119, considered too violent by the Bishop of Quebec, i. 119, Cornwallis offers a reward for the head of, i. 119, at Beaubassin, i. 121, burns Beaubassin, i. 121, 122, his hatred of Captain Howe, i. 123, Captain Howe treacherously murdered by the Indians of, i. 123, 124, his harshness to the Acadians, i. 125; absurd letter of, i. 126, threatens the Acadians, i. 127, 244; shares the control of Beauséjour, i. 248, asked by Duquesne to find a pretext for attacking the English, i. 248, his power at Fort Beauséjour, i. 252, supported by Duquesne, i. 252, nicknamed "Moses," i. 252; possesses an ingredient of honest fanaticism, i. 252, threatens the Acadians, i. 253; sustained by Vergor, i. 253, in the attack on Fort Beauséjour, i. 259, his flight, i. 261; at Quebec, i. 261, embarks for France, i. 261, captured by the English, i. 261, narrow escape of, i. 261; his remarkable character for inhumanity, i. 262, i. 265, letter to La Jonquière from, iii. 265, 266, cost of his intrigues, iii. 267, 268; his payments for English scalps, iii. 268.
- Le Marchant, Sir Denis, on the Heights of Abraham, iii. 138; on Pitt's resignation, iii. 244.
- Le Mercier, Chevalier, at Fort Duquesne, i. 159, 160; in the attack on Fort Necessity, i. 163, chief of the Canadian artillery, ii. 137, his interview with Major Eyre, ii. 137; at Oswego, ii. 149; ii. 224, his knavery exposed by Montcalm, ii. 240, ii. 293; arrested, iii. 281.
- Lenfant, i. 14
- Lenisse, Madame de, ii. 146
- "Léopard," the, ii. 49
- Lepaon, i. 14
- Léry, the engineer, draws a plan of Detroit, i. 81; sent by Vaudreuil against Fort Bull, ii. 61, destroys Fort Bull, ii. 62
- Leslie, Lieutenant, on the battle of Monongahela, i. 227.
- Les Mines, i. 113
- Lesser Onontio, the, see Onontio
- Leuthen, Frederic of Prussia, defeats the Austrians at, ii. 245, 251
- Le Verrier, in command at Michilimackinac, ii. 235, makes his fortune, ii. 235
- Levi, Point, iii. 54; seized by Wolfe, iii. 55, 58, 61, 62, 63, 65,

- 66, 70, 71, 72, 74, 106, 113, 117, 118, 120, 123, 124, 181, English outpost established at, iii 181; attacked by French skirmishers, iii 181; iii 290
- Leves, the New England, ii 71-73
- "Le Vieux Montréal," iii 218
- Lévis, Chevalier de, on the death of Jumonville, i. 156, named second in command to Montcalm, ii 46; Montcalm's fondness for, ii 49, at Brest, ii 50, in Canada, ii. 59, at Montreal, ii 62; hastens to Ticonderoga, ii 64, in command at Ticonderoga, ii. 65, Montcalm's high estimate of, ii 65, his estimate of Montcalm, ii 66, left in charge of Ticonderoga, ii 94; ii 143, 144, 145, 146, 152, 154, in command of the battalions at Ticonderoga, ii 165, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 178, 179, 180, 182, 187, 189; on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii. 202, 203; on the population of German Flats, ii 211, at Montreal, ii 212; recommended by Vaudreuil to succeed Montcalm, ii. 213, quells the mob at Montreal, ii 214, his account of Rogers' flight, ii 220; captivated by Madame Pousscault, ii 233; ii. 292, 293; summoned to Ticonderoga, ii. 294; at Ticonderoga, ii 310, 316, 317, 318, 334; made major-general, iii 14, at Quebec, iii. 58, 59, 60, his preparations for defence, iii 72; sent to Montreal, iii 92; his letter to Boullamaque, iii 95; Quebec weakened by the absence of, iii 108, Montcalm's praise of, iii. 152; arrives at Quebec, iii. 156, his plans, iii 157; his letter to
- Bougainville, iii 158; on the loss of Montcalm, iii 158, reaches St Augustine, iii 159; learns that Quebec has surrendered, iii 159; at Jacques-Cartier, iii 162; rumors of his approach to storm Quebec, iii 180, hopes to recover Quebec, iii 185, sets out against Quebec, iii 186, his force, iii 187; attacks Old Loretto, iii 187, before Ste-Foy, iii 187, 188, attacked by Murray, iii 193; the battle, iii 195, on the French losses at Ste-Foy, iii 197; asks for aid from France, iii 199; exchanges courtesies with Murray, iii 200; destruction of his ships, iii 202, raises the siege of Quebec, iii 203, his retreat, iii 203, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii. 204, excites himself for defence, iii 207, at Montreal, iii 211; iii 212; his relations with Vaudreuil, iii 213, iii 216, 219; his protest against capitulating, iii 221, returns to France, iii 230, iii 271, 275, 279; on the losses at Ticonderoga, iii. 280; on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii 286, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287; on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 293
- Lévis, Fort, Pouchot in command at, iii 216, attacked by Amherst, iii 216; surrenders to the English, iii 216
- Lewis, Major, ii 347, in Grant's expedition, ii 360, 362, captured by the French, ii 363.
- "Licorne," the, ii 49; Montcalm and Bougainville sail for New France in, ii. 50.

- Liegnitz, Frederic of Prussia victorious at, iii 235
- Lighthouse Point, ii 258, Wolfe at, ii 267, 268
- Ligneris, Captain, at Fort Duquesne, i 216, in the battle of Monongahela, i 224, 229, in command at Fort Duquesne, ii 350, ii 360, uncomfortable position of, ii 364, deserts Fort Duquesne, ii 368, 369, iii 8, summoned to Pouchot's aid, iii 87, responds, iii 88, captured by the English, iii 90, pension asked for, iii 270, iii. 271, 272, receives the Cross of the Order of St. Louis, iii 273
- Lagonier, General, urges that Annapolis ought to be defended, i 184
- Ligomer Bay, iii 94
- Lindesay, Lieutenant, on the building of Fort Frontenac, i 77
- "Lis," the, i 192, attacked and overpowered by the English, i 193
- L'Isle-Dieu, Abbé de, i 98, 111, 129, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i. 156
- Lismahago, the, of Smollett, i 165
- Littlehales, on the capture of Oswego, ii 104
- Little Meadows, the, Biaddock's army at, i 213
- Little Niagara, Fort, Joncaire-Chabert in command at, iii 86, burned, iii 86.
- Livingston, Wilham, on William Johnson, i. 327, on the Shirley-Johnson-Delancey dispute, ii 14, on the weak condition of the colonies, ii 106
- Livingston, manor of, i 35
- Lloyd, John, letter from Campbell to, iii. 174.
- Lodge, Henry Cabot, on the social condition of the colonies, i. 170
- Logstown, i 49, a chief resort for English traders, i 50, Gist at, i 57, treaty at, i 64, Washington at, i 138
- London, i 9, iii 241, 249
- "London Chronicle," the, ii 326
- "London Magazine," on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173; on the siege of Louisbourg, ii. 287; on the Niagara expedition, ii. 12, on the capture of Oswego, ii 103; on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 204, on the losses at Ticonderoga, iii 280
- London, the Cabinet of, iii. 16
- London, the Tower of, iii 241
- "Long House," the, of the Five Nations, i 67
- Long Island, ii 205
- Long Saut, the, Amherst descends, iii 217
- Longueuil, Baron de, temporarily succeeds La Jonquière as governor of Canada, i 86, on the perils of the French, i 87 88, on the English traders, i 88, on the attack on Pickawillany, i 90, i 107, correspondence between Girard and, i 111, at Fort Duquesne, i 160, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175; ii 292, iii 101
- Longueuil (younger), among the Mission Indians, ii 164
- Long Wharf, at Boston, i. 256.
- Lonsdale, Lord, iii 30
- Loppinot, at Louisbourg, ii. 276, 277, 279
- Lorambec, ii 262, 263
- Loramie Creek, i. 54.

- Lords of the Admiralty, the, i 188, 192
- Lords of Trade and Plantations, the, letters from Dinwiddie to, i 145, 165, 168, 184, letters from Delancey to, i 174, urge treaties to be made with the Indians, i 179, i 267, letter from Lawrence to, i 273, Johnson writes to, i 306, Johnson inveighs against Shirley's Indian agents to, ii 12, 13, on the grant made by Parliament for Shirley's new campaign, ii 69; letter from Handy to, ii 103
- Lords of the Treasury, the, ii 69
- Lorotte, i 216; ii 58; iii 128, 152, Hazen's rangers at, iii 182
- Lorimier, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175.
- Loring, Captain, iii 83, 93
- Lossing, on Bradstreet's Fight, ii 83
- Lothnière, on the defeat of Brad-dock, i 229, a Canadian engineer, fortifies Ticonderoga, ii 60, 64, 65; ii 293.
- Loudon, Earl of, supersedes Shirley as commander-in-chief, ii 70, confused by the independent committees, ii 74, persuades the colonies to give up their independent committees, ii 74; on Villier's expedition against Oswego, ii 81, meets Shirley in New York, ii 86; characteristics of, ii 86; reaches Albany, ii 87, turns his whole force against Ticonderoga, ii 87; his meeting with Winslow, ii 87; his conflict with the New England officers, ii 87; examines the state of the provincial forces, ii. 88, correspondence of, ii. 88; Burton's report on the provincial camps to, ii 88, 89, reinforces Oswego, ii 93, accuses Shirley of leaving Oswego weakly garrisoned, ii 101; on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, not a Scipio, ii 107, blames Shirley for the loss of Oswego, ii 107, himself to blame for the loss of Oswego, ii 107, Franklin's opinion of the campaign of, ii 108; size of his command, ii 108, at Fort Edward, ii 108; ii 115, 116, 122, his sarcastic letter to the colonial minister, ii. 126, demands free quarters for his troops, ii 127, opposition to his demands, ii 128, Major Eyle's report to, ii 136, 139; ii 149, urges an expedition against Louisbourg, ii 157, lays an embargo on colonial shipping, ii 158; impatient at Houlbourne's delay, ii 158, sets sail with his force, ii 159, meets Houlbourne at Halifax, ii 159; abandons his enterprise, ii 160, ii 173, 185, 186, 190, receives news that Fort William Henry is captured, ii 201; his boasts, ii 204; his orders to Webb, ii 204; in New York, ii. 205, on Belétre's campaign, ii. 210; ii. 214; manifold failures of, ii 250; recalled by Pitt, ii 253, cost to Massachusetts of the expedition of, ii 290; ii 335, 339, iii. 226; letter from Webb to, iii 276
- Louis XIII, unfit to govern, i 17
- Louis XV, breaks the traditional policy of France, i 4; America owes much to the imbecility of, i 5, his generals, i 12, at Versailles, i 13, revives the persecution of the Huguenots, i

- 16; the manifold ills of France summed up in, i 16, description of, i 16, 17, stunts Madame de Pompadour in nothing, i 18; orders Dinwiddie to repel invaders from Virginia, i 143, makes the Acadians his tools and then his victims, i 295, shares Madame de Pompadour's hatred for Frederic the Great, ii 41; smallness of the force given to Montcalm by, ii 49, responsible for the loss of Canada, iii 223, iii 256
- Louisbourg, capture of, i 31; i 301, 302, the battalions of Artois and Bourgogne at, ii 55, English preparations against, ii 157, France prepares a strong defence, ii 157, the English expedition abandoned, ii 160, Franquet sent to strengthen, ii 222; Pitt's plan to capture, ii 253, 254, location of, ii 258; description of, ii 258, condition of the fortress, ii 259, its garrison, ii 259; signs of the enemy, ii 260, Drucour governor of, ii 261, the siege, ii 267, capitulates, ii 280, the English in possession of, ii 280; Whitmore made governor of, ii 281; ii 371, iii 17, 22, Wolfe's fleet at, iii 23, 32; iii 30, abandoned and dismantled, iii 209
- Louisbourg, fortress of, i 96, restored to France by the Treaty of Utrecht, i 96, made more formidable, i 96, Desherbiers in command at, i 105, Count Raymond in command at, i 106, i 192, 246, 247, 251, 256, 260
- Louisbourg expedition, the, Colonel Jeffrey Amherst placed in command of, ii 253, size of the English force in, ii 261; attempts at landing, ii 263, a landing effected, ii 265, 266; the siege begun, ii 267; burning of the French fleet, ii 272, conflagration in the citadel, ii 273; deplorable position of the besieged, ii 274, the end near, ii 275, Drucour offers to capitulate, ii 276, negotiations, ii 277; the articles of capitulation, ii 280
- Louisbourg grenadiers, the, on the Heights of Abraham, iii 140, in Quebec, iii 161, iii 286
- Louisiana, i 22; population of, i 23, i 26, 39, 42, 43, 77, 85, 88; the Acadian exiles in, i 293; Vaudreuil governor of, ii 53; swamps of, iii 18, ceded to Spain by France, iii 253
- Louisiana militia, the, at Loyalhannon, ii 364.
- Louisville, i 62
- Louvigny, ii 146.
- Lowendal, General, i 12
- Lower Town (Quebec), the, set on fire by the English batteries, iii 108, Wolfe's plan to attack, iii 110, iii 159, 172, 179, 188, 199, 201.
- "Lowestoffe," the, brings relief to Quebec, iii 201, 202
- Lowry, reward offered for the scalp of, i 84
- Lowther, Katherine, betrothed to Wolfe, iii 30, 127
- Loyalhannon Creek, ii 350, 357, 359, 363, 364, 365, 366.
- Lumina, Paulin de, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 155
- Lusignan, commandant at Ticonderoga, ii 133
- Lutherans, the, in Pennsylvania, i 33, in New York, i 35.

- Lutterberg, the battle of, ii 252
- Lydins, a Dutch trader, in correspondence with the French, ii 122
- Lyman, General Phineas, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 301, at the Great Carrying Place, i 305, in the battle of Lake George, i 317, urges Johnson to capture Ticonderoga, i 324, Johnson jealous of, i 325, presides at Johnson's council of war, i 326, Johnson makes no mention of, i 327, at Fort Edward, ii 88, 89, 90.
- Lyman, Fort, i 305, Blanchard at, i 305; Johnson at, i 306, the Mohawks at, i 307; i 309; Dieskau resolves to attack, i 309, i 310, 311, 312; preparations for defence, i 315, i 320, name changed to Fort Edward, i 327
- Lyman's provincial regiment, ii 90; at Ticonderoga, ii 301, 303.
- Lyons, ii 47
- Lyon's Cove, i 278.
- MACARTNEY, CAPTAIN, iii 188
- Macaulay, Lieutenant, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 338.
- McBryer, Andrew, escapes from Pique Town, i 90
- Macdonald, Captain, in Grant's expedition, ii 361
- MacDonald, Captain Donald, sent against Le Calvaire, iii 182, his success, iii 182; at Ste-Foy, iii 193, 195.
- McDonough, Thomas, iii 289.
- Machault, the minister, i 15; a favorite of Madame de Pompadour, i 17; ii 249
- Machault, Fort, ii 368
- Machault, see Arnouville, Machault d'.
- McGinnis, Captain, at Fort Lyman, i 320, mortally wounded, i 320
- Mackay, Captain, in command of the régulais, i 157, in trouble with the volunteers, i 157; arrives at Gist's settlement, i 158; in the fight at Great Meadows, i 165 on the capitulation at Fort Necessity, iii 269
- Mackellar, Major Patrick, the engineer, on the English losses in the battle of Monongahela, i 228, 229, on the defences at Oswego, ii 84, 107, at Quebec, iii 49
- Mackenzie, Captain, in Grant's expedition, ii 361
- McKinney, describes Fort Duquesne, i 216
- Maclean, Allan, on the siege of Niagara, iii 87.
- McMullen, Lieutenant, iii 97.
- Macnamara, Admiral, ordered to Canada, i 180.
- MacVicar, Anne, at Albany, ii 4, her recollections of Albany, ii 4, 5
- Madawaska, i 294.
- Mahon, Lord, on the incapacity of Robinson, i 186.
- Maillet, missionary on Cape Breton, i 110; receives a pension, i 110; on the murder of Captain Howe, i 124
- Maillebois, Maréchal de, i 12, in Italy, ii 45
- Maine, State of, i 23, 120
- Malartic, ii 126; on the defeat of the rangers, ii 133; on the embassy from the Five Nations, ii 155, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173; diary of, ii 202, on the defences at Ticonderoga, ii 308; ii 334, on

- Montcalm's anxiety, iii 135; on the battle on the Heights of Abraham, iii 139, on the plans of Lévis, iii 157, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287
- Malcites from Acadia, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.
- Manach, the missionary, i 261, letter from Boishébert to, i 275
- Manila, English attack planned on, iii 247, 249
- Manitou, the, ii 167
- Mann, Sir Horace, letters from Walpole to, i 195, ambassador at Florence, ii 168
- Mansfield, i 10
- Mante, Major Thomas, on the pressure brought to force the Pennsylvania Assembly to pass measures of war, ii 34; on Bradstreet's Fight, ii 88, on the failure of the Louisbourg expedition, ii 161, on the size of the English force in the Louisbourg expedition, ii 261, on the landing of the English at Louisbourg, ii 266, on the negotiations for capitulation at Louisbourg, ii 277; on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287; his plan of the siege operations, ii 288, on the death of Howe, ii 304, on Wolfe, iii 35, on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, iii 76, on Amherst's force at Lake George, iii 78, on Amherst's capture of Ticonderoga, iii 82, on the sufferings of Rogers' rangers, iii 101, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 205; on Murray at Isle St-Thérèse, iii 212; on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 214, on the capture of Fort Lévis, iii 216, on the capture of Havana, iii 248
- Marcel, iii 274.
- Margry, ii 57
- Maria Theresa, of Austria, daughter of Charles VI, i 21, claimants for the possessions of, i 21, her memorable appeal, i 21, 22, devotion of her Hungarian nobles, i 22, her hatred for Frederic the Great, ii 39, Frederic the Great robs her of Silesia, ii 39, joins herself in secret league with Russia, ii 40, the recovery of Silesia her ruling passion, ii 40, courts the alliance of France, ii 40; makes advances to Madame de Pompadour, ii 40, ready to attack Frederic of Prussia, ii 243, iii 239
- Marigalante, the Island of, restored by England, iii 252
- Marin, the famous partisan, i 92, in command of the Ohio enterprise, i 134, indefatigable labors of, i 134, in extremity, i 134; his interview with the Half-King, i 135, sees that his work must remain half done, i 136, i 142, ii 56, 117, 118, makes a dash at Fort Edward, ii 173, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175, ii 221, official knavery of, ii 231, 234; attacks Rogers, ii 329, 330, the battle near Fort Anne, ii 331, saves Putnam's life, ii 333, iii 5, summoned to Pouchot's aid, iii 87; captured by the English, iii 90
- Marin, Madame, ii 224
- Marine and Colonial Department, the, Arnouville at the head of, i 186.

- Marolles, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287
- "Mariage à la Mode," i 9
- Marsh, Dr. Perez, on the battle of Lake George, i 316, 322
- Marshall, O. H., on the plates buried by Bienville, i 51
- Marshfield, i 255
- Martel, the King's storekeeper, at Montreal, ii 212, 225, 234, trial of, ii 241.
- Martin, on Montcalm, ii 46.
- Martin, Abraham, iii 132
- Martin, Father, on the responsibility for the signal of butchery at Fort William Henry, ii 203
- Martin, Sergeant Joshua, wounded, ii 132.
- Martinique, English attack planned on, iii 247; Rodney and Monckton attack, iii 248, in the hands of the English, iii 248; restored by the English, iii 252
- Maryland, the colony of, i 28, 36; Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i 144; her response, i 174, sends commissioners to the Albany convention, i 179; Sharpe, governor of, i 199, Braddock in, i 204, Indian attacks on the border settlements of, ii 15; writhing under border attacks, ii 109
- Maryland troops, the, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 340, 361
- Massachusetts, colony of, description of, i 28, almost independent of the mother country, i 28, sends commissioners to Albany, i 65; always ready to fight, i 175; maintains her military reputation, i 296, 297, grant made by Parliament to, ii 69; delays in supporting Shirley's grand scheme, ii 105, charges brought against, ii 290, Pownall's report of the condition of, ii 290, raises men for Abercrombie, ii 291, her war-debt, ii 291.
- Massachusetts, General Court of, the, Shirley cautious of giving umbrage to, i 175; makes a large grant to Shirley for protection against the French, i 175; makes an appropriation for an attack on Crown Point, i 296, method of raising and equipping men, ii 72
- Massachusetts regiment, the, with Abercrombie, ii 299.
- Massachusetts troops, the, lay siege to Beauséjour, i 269, at Fort Lyman, i 316, 325.
- Massey, Colonel, in the siege of Niagara, iii 89
- Mathet, missionary for the Nipissings, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
- Maumee River, the, i 44, French fort on, i 54, 55, 87, 89.
- Maurault, Abbé, ii 98.
- Maurepas, Comte de, i 268
- Maurin, François, ii 225, his official knavery, ii 227, 234, trial of, ii 241, arrested and tried, iii 231
- Mauritius, Island of, owned by France, i 12
- Maven, the Prussians defeated at, iii 234
- Maxwell, Thompson, ii 334; on the sufferings of Rogers' rangers, iii 101
- Mayhew, Rev. Jonathan, on the future greatness of the British-American colonies, iii 169
- Maynard, Captain, on Rogers, ii 331.

- Mazada, Madame, ii 48
 Meadow Mountain, i 213
 "Medicine men," Indian, ii 125.
 Mediterranean, the, ii 254
 Meech, Lieutenant, lands on the Island of Orleans, iii 49
 Mellen, Rev John, rejoices over the fall of Canada, iii 224
 Memramcook, fertile shores of,
 i 125, 127
 Memphremagog, Lake, iii 97, 99,
 101
 Menomines, the, ii 95, at Mont-calm's grand council, ii 174
 Mercer, Colonel Hugh, in command at Oswego, ii 84, aban-dons Fort Ontario, ii 98, death of, ii. 100, at Fort Duquesne, ii 369, on the siege of Niagara,
 iii 87
 "Mermaid," the, i 256
 Merriman, Sergeant, on the expedition against Ticonderoga, iii
 79
 Mexico, i 12, 22.
 Mexico, the Gulf of, i. 42, 212, 244
 Miami Indians, the, i 43, village of, i 54, Bienville among, i 54, 55, Gist and Croghan among,
 i 60, make a treaty with the Indians, i 60, hearty in the English cause, i 62, English traders among, i 84, depredations of, i 87, make humble submission to the French, i 135, i 217, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174, sent to the defence of Fort Duquesne, ii 350.
 Miami Confederacy, the, La Demonselle the great chief of, i 55
 Miami River, the, i 43, 53, Bien-ville ascends, i 53, i 59; the English on, i 88
 Michel, Bonhomme, iii 153
 Michigan, Lake, i 80, ii 95.
- Michilimackinac, the mission of, i.
 89, ii 163, 175, Le Vernier in command at, ii 233, iii 91
 Michilimackinac, Fort, important position of, i 80
 Micmac Indians, the, i 26; Le
 Loutre, missionary to, i 111,
 118; at Beaubassin, i 121,
 treacherously murder Captain
 Howe, i 123, 124, i 126, at Montcalm's grand council, ii
 174, at Louisbourg, ii. 271, iii
 21
 Milbank, Mr, ii 204.
 Mildmay, English commissioner on the question of American boundaries between France and England, i 128
 Miller, Captain, ii 115; iii 177.
 Mines, district of, i 244
 Mines Basin, i 250
 Mingoer, the, in the Ohio valley, i 43; i 49, not hearty in the English cause, i 62, Croghan sent to, i 63, at Fort Duquesne, i 217; set on by Dumas to attack the border settlements, ii 14, join the English, ii 359
 Minorca, garrison of, i 11, i 39, wrested from England, ii. 245, restored by France to England,
 iii 252
 Miquelon, the Island of, iii. 252
 Miramichi, ii 286
 Murepoix, French ambassador at London, i 186, estimates of, i
 186, dissimulation, i 190, ii 214
 Missaguash, the stream, i 120,
 123, 125, 244, 257, iii 21
 Mission Indians, the, i 68, ii. 58;
 Montcalm among, ii 163; description of, ii 167, 168, description of the war-feasts of, ii 168, reinforce Hebecourt, ii.
 215, barbarities of, ii 353.

- Missisquoi Bay, iii 96.
- Mississagas, the, i 74; at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.
- Mississippi River, the, France at the mouth of, i 22; i 26, 27; Indian tribes of, i 43, meadows of, i 44; savages of, i 45; i 46, 57, 130, 176, ii. 21, 58, iii 18, 251, 252, 253
- Mitchell, Dr John, on England's claims in America, i. 131
- Mohawk expedition, Vaudreuil's, ii 292, 293
- Mohawk Indians, the, i 31, 69, 93; alienated by the Dutch of Albany, i 178; with Johnson, i 300; at Fort Lyman, i. 307, i. 314, their ferocity in the battle of Lake George, i 320, 321, villages of, ii 6, ii 13; pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79, ii 156; at Fort Edward, ii 205; in Piquet's war-party, ii 263
- Mohawk River, the, i 31, 35, 66, 298; ii 4, Shirley on, ii 5; Fort Williams built on, ii 61, ii. 62, 79, 80, 91, 209, 323, 335
- Mohawk Valley, the, ii 292.
- Mohawk villages, the, ii 6
- Mohegans, the, attend the convention at Easton, ii. 356
- Mohegans from the Hudson, the, pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79
- "Molang," see Marin
- Molé, see La Mole.
- Mollwitz, i 22.
- Monarchy, the, in France, declining prestige of, i. 18
- Monckton, Lieutenant-Colonel Robert, in command of the Acadian enterprise, i 201; ordered to capture Beauséjour, i 203, sent to Boston by Law-1once, i 248, 254; in Shirley's regiment, i 255, at Fort Lawrence, i 257, before Fort Beauséjour, i 257; attacks Fort Beauséjour, i. 258, at Beauséjour, i 263, determines to remove the Acadians, i 263, his conditions, i 264-266, motives of his severe sentence, i. 265; ordered to seize the Acadians, i 276, his curt treatment of Winslow, i 277, i 290, 291, despatched to the Bay of Fundy, ii 284, in Wolfe's expedition, iii 33; at Quebec, iii 55, his proclamation, iii 55, iii 68; letter from Wolfe to, iii. 109, iii 117; on the Heights of Abraham, iii 133, 138; wounded, ii 148, 161, joins Rodney in the attack on Martinique, iii 248; on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii 286, iii. 288
- Monckton's brigade, at Quebec, iii 55, 73; in the battle of Quebec, iii. 142
- "Monmouth," the, captures the "Foudroyant," ii. 255
- Monongahela, the battle of, i 223-227; the English losses, i. 227, 228, after the battle, i. 230, 231, the French losses, i. 231
- Monongahela River, the, Washington on, i 142, i 150, 151, 161, 214, 215, 216, 218, 219; ii. 346, 361, 367, 368
- Mouro, Lieutenant-Colonel, in command at Fort William Henry, i 181; asks for reinforcements from Webb, ii 185, Webb's indecision, ii. 186; asked to surrender by Montcalm, ii 187; his refusal, ii 187; the attack,

- ii 188, warned by Webb to expect no help from him, ii 191, his desperate situation, ii 193, makes terms of capitulation, ii 194; futile efforts of Montcalm to hold the Indians to the terms of capitulation, ii 195-202; ii 294, iii 277.
- Montagu, George, letter from Walpole to, iii 236, 277.
- Montcalm, the elder, ii 43, death of, ii 44
- Montcalm, Chevalier de (son), appointed to command a regiment in France, ii 47, joins his father, ii 47, presented to the royal family, ii 48; marriage of, ii 15
- Montcalm, Louis de, i 293; appointed general to replace Dieskau, ii 42, early history of, ii 42, his ambition to become a member of the Academy, ii 43, joins the regiment of Hautant, ii 44, at the siege of Philipsbourg, ii 44, death of his father, ii 44; his marriage, ii 44; his children, ii 44, his family seat at Candiac, ii 45; his early campaigns, ii 45, made colonel of the regiment of Auxerrois, ii 45; taken prisoner at Piacenza, ii 45, returns to France, ii 45, again wounded, ii 46, his appointment in command of the French troops in North America, ii 46, his unpublished autobiography, ii 46, sets out from Candiac, ii 47, his letters to his mother, ii 47, 48, 58, 142, 145, 152, 212, iii 3, 13, 15, joined by his son, ii 47; preparations for departure, ii 47, at Rennes, ii 48; his letters to his wife, ii 48, 50, 95, 103, 141, 142, 143, 162, 211, 318, iii 18, 19, presents his son to the royal family, ii 48, his fondness for Lévis and Bougainville, ii 49, his troops, ii 49, sails for New France, ii 50, a rough voyage, ii 50; reaches the St. Lawrence river, ii 51, reaches Quebec, ii 51, meets Vaudreuil, ii 52; not welcome to Vaudreuil, ii 52, compared with Vaudreuil, ii 53, represents the Old France, ii 54; antagonism of his force to that of Vaudreuil's, ii 54, on his red allies, ii 58, his impressions of Canada, ii 59, 60, at Montreal, ii 62, Montreuil's opinion of, ii 63, his estimate of Vaudreuil, ii 63, hastens to Ticonderoga, ii 64, his high estimate of Lévis, ii 65, Lévis' estimate of, ii 66, his plans against Oswego, ii 94, recalled by Vaudreuil from Ticonderoga, ii 94, on Lake Champlain, ii 95, reaches Montreal, ii 95, at Fort Frontenac, ii 95, attacks Oswego, ii 96, 97, on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, faces Winslow at Ticonderoga, ii 108, on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139; familiar correspondence of, ii 141-147, possesses the tastes of a country gentleman, ii 142, receives the coveted decoration of the cordon rouge, ii 142, his strained relations with Vaudreuil, ii 147; Vaudreuil's accusations against, ii 150; rivalry between Vaudreuil and, ii 151-154 foibles of, ii 154, the Indians eager to see, ii 163; an Indian compliment, ii 163, sings the war-song with the converts of the Two Mountains, ii 164, gathers his force at Ticonderoga, ii 165, troublesome allies, ii 167, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173; calls a grand council, ii 174-178, his circular letter to the regular officers, ii 178; his advance, ii 179, his preparations, ii 187; summons Monro to surrender, ii 187, Monro refuses, ii 187, intercepts Webl's letter to Monro, ii 191; makes terms of capitulation with Monro, ii 194, his efforts to prevent butchery by the Indians, ii 195, 196, 199, 201; on the responsibility for the signal of butchery, ii 203, a missed opportunity, ii 206, Vaudreuil tries to tarnish his exploit, ii 206; his restrictions, ii 207, in Quebec, ii 211, his further letters to Boullamaque, ii 211, 212, 214; his disgust, ii 211; not pleased with Montreal, ii 211; annoyed by his relations with Vaudreuil, ii 212; his account of Rogers' fight, ii 220; reveals Bigot's knavery to the ministry, ii 239; given absolute power in the colony, ii 240, on the maladministration of Canada, ii 241, ii 292; left to defend himself as he can, ii 293; decides to remain at Ticonderoga, ii 293, ii 302; at the Falls, ii 305; desperate position of, ii 309, his chief hope lay in Abercrombie's blunders, ii 309; on the number of the French force at Ticonderoga, ii 311, the assault, ii 311; defeats Abercrombie, ii 316; his losses, ii 317, his relief, ii 317; announces his victory, ii 318; erects a cross, ii 318, receives reinforcements, ii 328, ii 335, breaks camp, ii 337, determines to ask for his recall, iii 3; Vaudreuil envious of, iii 3; Vaudreuil asks for the recall of, iii 6, dissensions, iii 6, 7, his disgust, iii 8, realizes the necessities of Canada, iii 12, made lieutenant general, iii 14, letter from Belleisle to, iii 16, 17; his reply, iii 17; inclined to the plan of concentration, iii 18, sad news from Candiac, iii 19, correspondence of, iii 20; iii 38, hastens to Quebec, iii 39, location of his troops, iii 41; his headquarters, iii 42, his relative position to Vaudreuil, iii 44, iii 50, 51; favored by the elements, iii 51, tries the virtues of his fleships, iii 52; his letters to Boullamaque, iii 54, 118, 275, iii 58, 60, 61, in a defensive attitude, iii 64, forced to weaken his army at Beauport, iii 66; does not improve his opportunity, iii 66, refuses to fight on Wolfe's terms, iii 70; attacked by Wolfe, iii 71; his perplexity, iii 72; iii 81, 92; let the parishes burn, iii 105, iii 112, 113, 115; deceived by a pretended attack, iii 125; his force compared to Wolfe's, iii 125; passes a troubled night, iii 134, the alarm, iii 135; gathers his army together, iii 135, his amazement, iii 136; Vaudreuil delays sending his forces to join, iii 136, a council of war, iii 136; alternatives, iii 137; the crisis, iii 139; his defeat, iii 139, mortally wounded,

- in 141; Vaudreuil throws the blame for defeat on, iii 145; his advice, iii 149, seriousness of the loss of, iii 151, last hours of, iii 152, his death, iii 153; his letter to Townshend, iii 153, his burial, iii 153, 154, his funeral the funeral of New France, iii 154, Vaudreuil's jealous spite follows him after death, iii 162-167; his accusations against Vandieul, iii 166, 170, 171, his faults, in 167; in 191, 192, familiar letters of, iii 273-275, iii 279; on the losses at Ticonderoga, iii 280; letters on the battle of Quebec, iii 287, authorities on his death and burial, iii 290
 Montcalm, Madame de (wife), ii 44, her children, ii 44, ii 47, letters from her husband, ii 48, 50, 95, 103, 141, 142, 143, 162, 211, 318; iii 7, 18, 19, 273-275.
 Montcalm, Mademoiselle de, marriage of, iii 15, 19
 Montcalm, the Marquis de, i viii; ii 52, iii 20.
 Montcalm, Mirète, death of, iii 19
 Montesquieu, i 18
 Montgomery, Captain Alexander, cruelty of, iii 104
 Montgomery, Colonel Richard, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 367, iii 104
 Montgomery's regiment, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 340
 Montgust, Captain, iii 146
 Montguy, at Ticonderoga, ii 305
 Montigny, captured by the English, iii 90
 Montmorenci, the falls of, iii 41, 49, 50, 51, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 71, 72, 73, 74, repulse of the English at, iii 74, 75, 109, 110, 117
 Montmorenci, the heights of, occupied by Wolfe, iii 60, iii 63, 70, repulse of the English at, iii 76, 102, 111, 228, 285
 Montour, Andrew, the interpreter, of great service to Gist, i 57, sketch of, i 58
 Montour, Catharine, i 58.
 Montpellier, ii 52, 145
 Montreal, Bienville at, i 55, 56; i 70, 93, 134, 136, 159, Montcalm and Lévis at, ii 62, Vaudreuil's conference with the Indians at, ii 79, Montcalm reaches, ii 95, ii 105, 115; the military heart of Canada, ii 141, social life at, ii 143; famine in, ii 213, census of, iii 17, iii 36; militia of, iii 43; Amherst plans an attack upon, iii 78, Lévis sent to, iii 92, iii 107; Vaudreuil at, iii 162, iii 183, 186, 187, 207, 208, 209, Lévis at, iii 211, description of, iii 217, the French army gathered at, iii 218.
 Montreuil, Dreskau's adjutant, in the battle of Lake George, i 318, correspondence of, i 328; ii 63; his opinion of Montcalm, ii 63, on the defeat of the rangers, ii 133; on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139, iii 145, on the battle of Quebec, iii 287.
 Monte, De, see De Monte
 Moore, William, letter to Governor Morris from, ii 33
 Moravian brotherhood, the, ii 352; the mission settlements of, ii 353.
 Moravians, the, in Pennsylvania, i 34; ii 33.

- Moro Castle, attacked by the English, iii 248, carried by storm, iii 248.
- MORRIS, Captain Roger, aide-de-camp to Braddock, i 210, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i 227, 238, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229
- MORRIS, Governor of Pennsylvania, succeeds Hamilton, i 173, in controversy with his Assembly, i. 173, 174, letters from William Shirley the younger to, i 195, 209, summoned to Alexandria by Braddock, i 198, on the conduct of Dunbar, i. 241, letters from John Shirley to, ii 8, 9, 11; his letter of condolence to William Shirley, ii 9; his letter to Dinwiddie, ii 9, on the attitude of the Quakers, ii 25, his struggle with the Assembly, ii. 26, 33, on the attitude of the Assembly, ii 27, troubled by the Indian massacres, ii 29; still fencing with the Assembly, ii. 30; declares war against the Delawares and Shawanoes, ii 80; letter from Washington to, ii 110
- "Moses," see Le Loutre.
- Mountain Street, in Quebec, iii. 161, 172, 179, 189
- Murdering Town, Indian hamlet of, Washington at, i. 141.
- Murdoch, Beamish, on Le Loutre at Fort Beauséjour, i. 259, on the capture of Le Loutre, i 261.
- Murray, Captain Alexander, i 270, at Fort Edward, i 278, assists Winslow in the expulsion of the Acadians, i. 280; issues a summons to the Acadians, i 282, his success, i. 285, congratulates Winslow, i. 288; i. 289, 290
- Murray, Brigadier, in Wolfe's expedition, iii. 33; at Quebec, iii 106, repulsed at Pointe aux Trembles, iii 106, at Deschambault, iii 106, letter from Wolfe to, iii 109; fords the Etechemin, iii 117, on the Heights of Abraham, iii 133, in command at Quebec, iii 161, 176, character of, iii 176; escape of the French ships, iii 177, rumors of the approach of Lévis, iii 180, attacks the French skirmishers, iii 181, on the capture of Le Calvaire, iii 182, prepares for an attack from the French, iii 184, learns of the expedition of Lévis, iii 189; reinforces Ste-Foy, iii 190; alternatives, iii 190, his rashness, iii 191, attacks Lévis, iii 193; the battle, iii 195, forced to retreat, iii. 195, strengthens Quebec, iii. 198, holds the confidence of his officers, iii. 199; exchanges courtesies with Lévis, iii. 200; relief arrives, iii 201; on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii. 204; iii. 207, to ascend the St Lawrence, iii 207, 208, his advance, iii. 209-211, his proclamation to the Canadians, iii 211; carries out his threats, iii 211; at Isle St-Thérèse, iii 212, 215, on the force of the French and English at Quebec, iii. 286; on the strength of the French and English at the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 292
- Murray's brigade, at Quebec, iii. 58
- Muskingum, Wyandot village of, Gist at, i 57; Croghan at, i 57
- Muskingum River, the, Bienville buries a plate at the mouth of, i 51.

"NABBYCROMBIE, Mrs.," see Abercrombie, General James

Napier, 1, 203

Naples, the throne of, House of Bourbon holds, 1 12

Napoleonic tempests, the, 1 3

Narrows, the, 11 117, 122, 129, 132, 180, 298

Nash, Beau, 1 9

Nash, Goldsmith's life of, 1 196.

Necessity, Fort, built by Washington, 1 156; Washington and his Indians at, 1 157; description of, 1 162, the Virginians at, 1 162, attacked by Villiers, 1 162, the capitulation, 1 164, 165, abandoned, 1 166, the seriousness to the English of the defeat at, 1 167, 11 121, 268

"Neptune," the, 11 32, 34

"Neutrals," the, 1 247

New Brunswick, 1 94, 128, 129

Newcastle, Duke of, power of, 1 10, his total unfitness for place and power, 1 184, characteristics of, 1 184, anecdotes of, 1 184, 185, ridiculed, 1 185, his support necessary to Pitt, 1 185, the growth of the decrepitude and decay of a great party, 1 185, consults Hanbury on American affairs, 1 204; does not support Pitt, 11 246, made First Lord of the Treasury, 11 246, Wolfe a hopeless enigma to, 11 31, 11 226, disliked by George III, 11 239, 11 243, 245; resigns, 11 246

Newell, Chaplain, at Fort Lyman, 1 307

New England, 1 28, 29, best known to her neighbors by her worst side, 1 30, the most military among the British colonies, 1 30, bore the heaviest brunt of preceding wars, 1 31; in the capture of Louisbourg, 1 31, Virginia contrasted with, 1 31, native literature of, 1 32, essential antagonism of Virginia and, 1 33, strong distinctive character of, 1 34, always ready to fight, 1 175, sends commissioners to the Albany convention, 1 179, supports the plan against Crown Point and Beau-séjour, 1 200, 201, shows a fine martial spirit, 1 205; discouraged by Johnson's failure to take Crown Point, 11 69, doubtful of Shirley's military abilities, 11 69, joins Shirley's new campaign, 11 69, alone fully earnest for war, 11 105, the opposing force, 11 105, rejoices over Wolfe's victory, 11 169, rejoices over the fall of Canada, 11 223

New Englanders, the, Shirley in sympathy with, 1 175

New England levies, the, methods of raising and equipping, 11 71, 72, the pay, 11 72, the officers, 11 73, at Ticonderoga, 11 295

New England rangers, the, 11 36, at Quebec, 11 49, 55, 60, 63

New England traders, the, 1 246

New England troops, the, at Beau-séjour, 1 263, could not be kept in Acadia, 1 266, at Fort Edward, 1 278, against Crown Point and Ticonderoga, 11 69, John Winthrop chosen to lead, 11 69, muster at Albany for the attack on Crown Point, 11 71, at Half Moon, 11 71, at Louisbourg, 11 264, 273

Newfoundland, 1 192; 11 159, temporary English reverses in, 11 249, 11 252, 257.

- New France, boundaries of, i 22, population of, i 23, hindrances to growth of, i 23, built on the principle of exclusion, i 24
- New Hampshire, colony of, Indian attacks on, i 183, joins Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 297, Parliament makes a grant to, ii 69, sacrifices of, ii 292
- New Hampshire borderers, ii 119
- "New Hampshire Gazette," the, ii 314, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 338, on the sufferings of Rogers' rangers, iii 101.
- New Hampshire levies, the, i 302
- New Hampshire regiment, the, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 301
- New Haven, i 302
- New Jersey, the colony of, i 36, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i 144, 146, refuses to respond, i 171, 175, plans against Crown Point, i 201; Parliament makes a grant to, ii 69; withering under border attacks, ii 109
- New Jersey Regiment, the, in the Niagara expedition, ii 5; diverted by Shirley from Crown Point, ii 12, with Abercrombie, ii 299.
- New Orleans, the city of, i 44, retained by France, iii 251, made over to Spain, iii 253
- New Oswego, Vicar's report on the defences of, ii 85; location of, ii 99; burned by the French, ii 103
- Newport, rejoices over the fall of Louisbourg, ii 282
- New York, city of, description of, i 35; French designs upon, i 200, Shirley holds a council of war in, ii 68, British troops assigned to, ii 127, makes opposition, ii 125, ii 200, rejoices over the fall of Louisbourg, ii 282
- New York, the Province of, i 30, 13, description of, i 34, 35, claims Oswego, i 77, i 130, ordered to respond to Dinwiddie's appeal for aid against the French, i 147, contentious stubbornness of, i 174, sends commissioners to the Albany convention, i 179, Indian attacks on, i 183, plans against Crown Point, i 201; attempted expulsion of the Protestant population of, i 295, joins in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 297; disputes between the governor and the Assembly, ii 35, 36, Parliament makes a grant to, ii 69, withering under border attacks, ii 109
- New York Assembly, the, composition of, i 63, i 65, neglects to maintain Oswego, i 77, its reply to Governor Delancey's appeal, i 174, dispute between the governor and, ii 35, victory won by, ii 36
- New York levies, the, ii 71.
- "New York Mercury," on the Pennsylvanian disputes, ii 37, iii 289
- New York provincials, the, iii 280
- New York regiment, the, with Abercrombie, ii 299
- New York troops, the, at Alexandria, i 168; in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 303
- Niagara, Celeron at, i 41, the most important pass of the western wilderness i 41; the

- key of the Great West, i 66, Father Piquet at, i 71, Joncaire at, i 74, English plans against, i 201; Shirley to lead the attack upon, i 201, i 202; importance of mastering, ii 3, French camp at, ii 60, ii 335, 350, 369
- Niagara expedition, the, i 241, alone would have gained for England the control of the Ohio valley, ii 3, Shirley sets out on, ii 4, the Jersey Blues in, ii 6, Shirley's and Pepperrell's regiments in, ii 6, at Oswego, ii 6, 7; at the Great Carrying Place, ii 6, at Wood Creek, ii 7, on Lake Oneida, ii 7, on Lake Ontario, ii 7, difficulties, ii 10, abandoned, ii 11
- Niagara Falls, visited by Father Piquet, i 76
- Niagara, Fort, Father Piquet at, i 75, the key to the inland oceans, i 80; i 85; location of, ii 9; French force at, ii 10, rebuilt by Pouchot, ii 60, the battalion of Béarn encamped before, ii 62; Shirley's plan to seize, ii 68, 80, 86; London abandons the attempt against, ii 87, ii 102, attacked by the English, iii 64, Amherst resolves to capture, iii 77; Prideaux at, iii 85; Pouchot in command at, iii 86, besieged by Prideaux, iii 87, surrendered to the English, iii 91; its capture an important stroke, iii 91, iii 108
- Niagara portage, the, i 83, 200
- Niagara River, the, iii 86.
- Niaouré Bay, ii 95
- Nicholson, General, conquers Acadia, i 94.
- Niles, on Bradstreet's Fight, ii 83, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173, on Ticonderoga, ii 314
- Nîmes, ii 42
- Nipissings of Lake Nipissing, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.
- Nipissings, the, in the Ohio valley, i 43, at Fort Frontenac, i 78; join the French against the English, i 159
- Nivernois, Duc de, sent to London as envoy, iii 249
- Niverville, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
- Noblesse, the Canadian, iii 229.
- Normanville, the brothers, at Fort Duquesne, i 218
- North, Lord, iii 170.
- North America, English gains the mastery of, i. 6, claimed by France, i 12
- Northampton, i 302
- North Carolina, the colony of, i 36, Dinwiddie asks aid against the French from, i. 144, responds to the appeal, i 147; Dobbs governor of, i 194, ii 371
- North Carolina regiment, the, commanded by Colonel Innes, i 168; poor discipline in, i 169; in Shirley's new campaign, ii 70
- North Carolina troops, the, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 340
- Northern colonies, the, threatened by Crown Point, i 296
- North Pole, the, i 22
- Northwest Bay, see Ganouskie Bay
- Notre-Dame, Church of, at Quebec, iii 291
- Nova Scotia, i 94, 128, Lawrence

- governor of, i 199; Indians of, i 249; i 250, ii. 204, 282; iii 21, 23, 33
- Noyan, De, commander at Fort Frontenac, ii. 335, surrenders to Bradstreet, ii. 335
- "Number Four," iii 83, Rogers reaches, iii 100 See also Charlestown.
- Nuns, the, see Hospital Nuns, the
- Nuthall, iii 245
- O'CALLAGHAN, on the responsibility for the signal of butchery at Fort William Henry, ii. 203.
- Ochterlony, Captain, killed at Quebec, iii 74
- Ogden, Captain, in Rogers' expedition, iii 98; wounded, iii 98, iii 100
- Ogdensburg, i 41
- Ohio Company, the, formation of, i. 56, its members, i 57; sends Gist to explore the Ohio country, i. 57; builds a trading-house at Will's Creek, i. 63; builds a storehouse at Redstone Creek, i 150, 161.
- Ohio country, the, Gist, sent to explore, i 57
- Ohio enterprise, the, i 93; lands at Presqu'isle, i 133; hardships of, i. 134, Marin in command of, i 134; Péan in command of, i. 134, discontent, i. 134; Saint-Pierre in command of, i. 135; ordered by the Half-King to leave the country, i. 135.
- Ohio Indians, the, Joncaire makes anti-English speeches to, i 62, i. 72, side with the English, i. 87, ready to march against the English, i. 159
- Ohio River, the, i. 23, 26, 40, 42; savages of, i. 45; i. 46; Bienville bids farewell to, i. 54, multitude of Indian villages on, i 54, proposed English trading-house at the fork of, i. 61, Duquesne prepares to occupy the upper waters of, i 91, proposed French forts on, i. 91, i. 93, 133, 136, 137, 138; ii 58, 146, 225, 350, 352, 368, iii 38; the attempt to restore French ascendancy on, iii 87, iii 90
- Ohio valley, the, need of vindicating French rights in, i 40, Bienville sent into, i 40, importance of the possession of, i 43, Indian population of, i. 43; the French in, i 43, 44; claimed by the Pope and the Bourbons, i. 44; English fur-traders in, i 45; claimed by Pennsylvania and Virginia, i 64, Indian tribes of, i 67; the centre of Indian population, i. 67, Father Piquet's scheme to drive the English from, i 72; Washington on the French designs on, i 139, the Niagara expedition alone would have gained the control of, ii 3
- Ojibwas, the, attack the Demoiselle, i. 89, profess devotion to the French, i. 135, at Fort Duquesne, i. 217; at Montcalm's grand council, ii. 174
- "Old Britain," see La Demoiselle.
- "Old Church in Boston," the, iii. 224.
- "Old Dominion," the, i. 142, 147, 169.
- "Olden Time," on Grant's defeat, ii. 363, 364; on Post, ii. 372
- Old Lorette, iii. 137; fortified outpost at, iii 180; attacked by French grenadiers, iii 180; Lévis attacks, iii. 187, iii. 203, 292

- Old Oswego, see Pepperrell, Fort.
- Oneida, Lake, Shirley on, ii. 7, iii. 84
- Onidas, the, i. 69, 299, pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79, ii. 209, join Bradstreet's expedition, ii. 335, at Fort Frontenac, ii. 336
- Onondaga, the Iroquois capital, i. 70, Conrad Weiser at, i. 70; the confederate council at, i. 178, 180, Johnson at, ii. 78, ii. 82.
- Onondaga River, the, i. 78, ii. 7, 335, iii. 84
- Onondagas, the, i. 69, drawn more and more to Piquet's mission, i. 178, pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79.
- Ontario, i. 71
- Ontario, Fort, Pepperrell's regiment at, ii. 85, location of, ii. 97, its garrison, ii. 97, abandoned, ii. 98, burned by the French, ii. 103, fatal neglect of, ii. 107
- Ontario, Lake, i. 41, 69, 77; Father Piquet makes the entire circuit of, i. 80, i. 203, 300; ii. 6, Shirley on, ii. 7, ii. 60, the French secure all their posts on, ii. 62; Shirley's plan to master, ii. 68, 69, 71; ii. 86; France conquers the undisputed command of, ii. 102, ii. 106, controlled by Fort Frontenac, ii. 334, Bradstreet on, ii. 335, ii. 371, iii. 36, 38, 86, 91, 92, 208, 215
- Ord, Captain, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i. 236.
- Ordonnances*, in Canada, ii. 236
- Orleans, the channel of the English fleet at, iii. 45
- Orleans, the Island of, iii. 45, 48; the English land on, iii. 49; iii. 55, 71, 189, 208.
- Orleans, the Point of, English outpost at, iii. 52, 58, 61, 63, 74, 113, 117, 124.
- Orme, Captain Robert Braddock's aide-de camp, i. 198, 203, on the Virginians, i. 203, i. 209, his journal, i. 210, his portrait, i. 210, description of, i. 210, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i. 227, i. 229, the retreat, i. 232, on the death of Braddock, i. 234, his letter to Dinwiddie, i. 237; Dinwiddie's reply to, i. 239.
- Ormsby, John, on the siege of Niagara, iii. 87.
- Orry, comptroller-general turned out by Madarne de Pompadour, i. 17.
- Osages, the, i. 46, tribes of the Wabash and the Illinois leaguings with, i. 88
- Osborn, Admiral, sent to the Mediterranean, ii. 254, hold La Clue imprisoned at Toulon, ii. 255
- Osborne, Sir Dauvers, i. 179
- Osgood, Captain, at Fort Edward, i. 280, 282
- Oswegatchie, Father Piquet's mission, iii. 215.
- Oswegatchie River, the, i. 41, 56, 69, 70
- Oswego, city of, i. 77
- Oswego, English post of, i. 41, 65, 73, 74, of ill omen to the French, i. 77, claimed by New York, i. 77, left to take care of itself, i. 77, maintained personally by Governor Clinton, i. 77; Father Piquet at, i. 77, the French plot to destroy, i. 82, 83, i. 93, English vessels built at, i. 203, the French plan to attack, i. 300, Shirley at, i. 325; the Niagara

- expedition at, ii 6, 7, ii 71, 80;
Vaudreuil sends Villiers to harass, ii 81.
- Oswego, Fort, ii 7, 36, 60, 62, Shirley anxious for, ii 84, the condition of its defences, ii 81, Colonel Mercer in command at,
ii 84, discontent in the garrison of, ii 84, Shirley reinforces, ii 86; importance of its defence, ii 86; London reinforces, ii 93;
captured by the French, ii 93;
French plans against, ii 95, attacked by Montcalm, ii 96, 97; its fate sealed, ii 98; surrender of, ii 100, losses on both sides at the capture of, ii 101, burned by the French, ii 101, its capture the greatest feat yet accomplished in America by the French arms, ii 102; behavior of its garrison not discreditable, ii 102, the ruins of, ii 103, plans and drawings of, ii 103; Vaudreuil claims the honor of taking, ii 118; ii 335; to be re-established, in 77, Haldimand at, iii 84; iii 165, Amherst's army gathers at, iii 215, in 228, instructions of the French colonial minister for the destruction of, iii 264
- "Ottawa," the French flag, in 215, captured by the English,
iii 215
- Ottawa, Indian village of, i 81
- Ottawa Indians, the, in the Ohio valley, i 43, try to make a treaty with the Miamis for the French, i 60, 61, attack the Demoiselle, i 89; join the French against the English, i 159, at Fort Duquesne, i 217; cannibalism among, ii 171, at Mont-calm's grand council, ii 174; sent to the defence of Fort Duquesne, ii 350
- Ottawa River, the, i 131, the Iroquois and Algonquins at the Two Mountains on, ii 58
- Ottawas of Michilimackinac, the,
at Montcalm's grand council,
ii 175
- Otter Creek, iii 83
- Otway's regiment, at Albany, ii
86
- Oudenarde, ii 237.
- Ousakak, i 264.
- Oxtoid, i 147.
- PAINE, TIMOTHY, letter from Crawford to, ii 92
- Palace battery, the, at Quebec, ii.
136.
- Palace Gate, the, at Quebec, iii.
42, 135, 159.
- Palatine settlement of German flats, the, ii 6
- Panama, English attack planned on, iii 217.
- Panet, Jean Claude, on the siege of Quebec, iii 57, 288; on the repulse of the English at Montmorenci, iii 76.
- PANNEY CERFS, the, ii 41
- Parfouru, Madame de, iii 275.
- Paris, the archives of, i 99.
- Paris, the Parliament of, ii 49.
- Paris, the Peace of, iii 251-254;
marks a fruitful epoch, iii 255;
results of, iii 255-259
- Paris, the salons of, i 18; commissioners in session at, i 91;
the Acadian boundary commission in session at, i 128, Montcalm at, ii 46, 47, Wolfe at,
iii 28.
- Parishes, the Canadian, burned by Wolfe, iii 104, 105.
- Parker, Colonel, ii 172.

- Parkman, Rev Ebenezer, ii 295
 Parkman, George Francis, iii 289
 Parkman, William, on Abercrombie, ii 295
 Parliament, the English, i 9; corruption in, i 10, makes a grant for Shirley's new campaign, ii 69
 Partridge, Colonel Oliver, ii 307
 Passamaquoddy Bay, in, 23
 Patten, Captain, comes to Bradstreet's assistance, ii 82
 Patten, Thomas, draws views of Montreal, iii 218
 Patterson's Creek, Indian massacre at, ii 28.
 Patton, John, i 84
 Paxton (Penn.), Indian massacres at, ii 30
 Peabody, ii 115
 Péan, Major Michel Jean Hugues, i. 92, ii. 146, succeeds Marin in command of the Ohio enterprise, i 134, at Montreal, ii 212, 223, 224, his official knavery, ii 227, his marriage, ii 232, Bigot makes his fortune, ii 232, jilted by his wife, ii 233, makes prosperous love to Madame Penisseault, ii 233, goes to France, ii 235, trial of, ii. 241; arrested and tried, iii 231
 Péan, Madame, ii 212, 223; Bigot becomes the accepted lover of, ii 232; becomes a power in Canada, ii 233
 Pedrom, Colonel Schuyler's brother, ii 304
 Penisseault, Antoine, ii 225, his official knavery, ii 227, trial of, ii 241, arrested and tried, iii 231
 Penisseault, Madame, Péan makes prosperous love to, ii 233, Lévis succeeds Péan in the graces of, ii 233, taken to France by Lévis, ii 233.
 Penn, Richard, antagonism of Franklin to, i 206, disputes with the Pennsylvania Assembly over the proprietary estates, ii 23, offers to contribute towards building a fort, ii 23, the offer rejected, ii 23; held as renegade from the faith of his father, ii 24, his contribution for the defence of the province, ii 34
 Penn, Thomas, antagonism of Franklin to, i 206, disputes with the Pennsylvania Assembly over the proprietary estates, ii 23, offers to contribute towards building a fort, ii 23, the offer rejected, ii 23; held as renegade from the faith of his father, ii. 24; his contribution for the defence of the province, ii 34.
 Penn, William, i 34, his plan for colonial union, i 37; makes a wise use of his feudal rights, ii. 24
 Pennahouel, chief of the Ottawas, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175, 177
 Pennoyer, Jesse, on Rogers' expedition, iii 101.
 Penns, the, i 64
 Pennsylvania, the colony of, i 28; differs from New England and Virginia, i 33, description of, i 33, 34, lacking in strong distinctive character, i. 34; feudal in form, i 35, English traders in, i 40, 45, claims the Ohio valley, i 64, i 128, Dinwiddie asks for aid against the French from, i. 144, refuses to respond, i. 147; the German in, i 172, sends commissioners to the Albany

- convention, i 179, i 204; shows apathy toward Braddock's expedition, i, 204, 205, border settlements attacked, ii 15, 21, standing quarrel between the governor and the Assembly, ii 22, the most democratic province in America, ii 24, contribution of the Penns for the defence of, ii 34, withstanding under border attacks, ii 109; Moravian settlements in, ii. 353
- Pennsylvania, College of, ii 36
- Pennsylvania Assembly, the, composition of, i 63; rejects Croghan's reports, i 63, 64, Governor Hamilton powerless against, i 147, Governor Hamilton presents circular letter from the Earl of Holderness to, i 172, curiously unlike the Virginia Assembly, i 172, refuses to respond to Governor Hamilton's requests, i 173, Governor Morris in controversy with, i 173, 174; its standing quarrel with the governor, ii 22; Franklin the leader of, ii 24, forgets the French and Indians, ii 21, still fencing with Morris, ii 30; refuse help to the borderers, ii. 31; pressure brought to force measures of war from, ii 32, 33, passes a mock militia law, ii. 34; forced to yield, ii. 35; refuses to support Shirley's new campaign, ii. 69; refuses to quarter Loudon's troops, ii 127, forced to yield, ii. 127, ii. 339; Forbes vexed with, ii. 344.
- "Pennsylvania Gazette," the, i. 182
- "Pennsylvania Magazine," ii. 127.
- Pennsylvania traders, the, i. 40, 45, 57, 63, 91.
- Pennsylvania troops, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 340, 361, 368.
- Penobscot, the, mission of, ii. 198.
- Penobscot Indians, the, ii. 203
- People, the, divine right of, i 8
- Pepperell, Fort, location of, ii 98, description of, ii 98, held by Shirley's regiment, ii 99.
- Pepperell's regiment, to attack Niagara, i. 201, in the Niagara expedition, ii 6; in Shirley's new campaign, ii 70, at Fort Ontario, ii 85
- Perné, ii 116
- Peironney, Captain, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 238
- Perrit Isle, Amherst at, iii 217.
- Perth, Wolfe at, iii 25
- Peter III., becomes Czar of Russia, iii 245; proclaims himself a friend of Frederic of Prussia, iii 245, ill-balanced, iii 245; deposed and strangled, iii. 246.
- Peter, Captain, ii. 358.
- Peter the Great, i. 20
- Peticodiac, i. 283.
- Petric, Johan Jost, taken prisoner, ii 210
- Peyronney, Ensign, at Fort Necessity, i. 161
- Poyton, Lieutenant, at Quebec, iii 74.
- Philadelphia, i. 34, 203; news of Braddock's defeat reaches, i 236, i 240, 241, 242, takes its stamp from the Quakers, ii. 22, the Quakers in, ii 24, British troops assigned to, ii 127; rejoices over the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 282, ii 340, 370, 371.
- Philadelphia, the City Council of, awards a medal to each officer in the expedition against Kittanning, ii 114.

- Philippines, the, English attack planned on, iii 247, 249
- Phillips, Lieutenant, ii 217, killed by the Indians, ii 217
- Phillips, governor of Acadia, i 101
- Philipsbourg, the siege of, Montcalm at, ii 44
- Phillips's regiment, deserters from, i 106.
- Phipps, Governor, letter from Johnson to, i. 325, letter from Shirley to, ii 69, John Ashley complains to, ii 74
- Piacenza, the walls of, Montcalm at the disastrous action under, ii 45
- Piankishaws, the, i 89.
- Pichon, Thomas, on the engagement between the "Dunkirk" and the "Alcide," i. 193, at Fort Beauséjour, i 252, a traitor, i 252, on the threats of Le Loutre, i. 253; journal of, i 259, on the capture of Le Loutre, i 261, on the cause of the misery of the Acadians, i 276, on the English landing at Freshwater Cove, ii 265, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287.
- Pickawillany, i. 217. See also Pique Town.
- Picts, the, iii. 209.
- Piquet, Abbé, the Sulpitian priest, at the mouth of the Oswegatchie, i 41, a zealous political agent, i 41; Bienville visits, i 56, his establishment of La Présentation, i 69, sketch of, i. 69; portrait of, i 69, temporal attractions of, i 70; spiritual instruction at, i 70, 71, boasts of, i 71, elated by his success, i 71, his letter to La Jonquiere and Bigot, i 71, his scheme to drive the English from the Ohio, i 72; failure of his scheme, i 72, called the "Apostle of the Iroquois," i 72, at Fort Frontenac, i 72, 73, at Toronto, i. 73, at Niagara, i 74, received by Becancour, i 75, at the Genesee, i 76, at Sodus Bay, i 76; at Oswego, i 77, his reception at Fort Frontenac, i 78, his journal, i 79, makes the entire circuit of Lake Ontario, i 80, i 82, draws the Onondagas more and more to his mission, i 178, ii 79, in the attack on Oswego, ii 101, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175, iii 85, his mission at Oswegatchie, iii. 215, and his war-party, iii 263
- Pique Town, the centre of English trade and influence, i 55, Gist at, i 59, wonderful growth of, i 60; Bienville ordered to attack, i 86, i 87, the centre of disaffection, i 88; English traders at, i 88, attacked by Langlade, i. 89
- Pitt, William, i. 8, characteristics of, i 10, 11, the support of Newcastle necessary to, i 185, on the incapacity of Robinson, i 186, letter from London to, ii 127, favors London's plan to attack Louisbourg, ii 157, ii 210, 214, the reins of power fall into the hands of, ii. 245; opposition to, ii 246, made Secretary of State, ii 246, towers supreme in British history, ii 247, his character, ii 247, 248; his objects, ii 249, sends an expedition to attack Rochefort, ii 250, Frederic's tribute to,

- ii 251; his inspiring influence, ii 251; his plans for America, ii. 253-255, ii 266, letters from Amherst to, ii 287, calls on the provinces for twenty thousand men, ii. 289; a ready response, ii 289, 290, Pownall's report on Massachusetts to, ii 290, his estimate of Howe, ii 296, ii 331, 338, 343, 349, 363, 364, 365; in 31, names Wolfe to lead the expedition against Quebec, iii 31, iii 33, 35, 45, 76, 77, 78, 82, 84, 93, 111, 112, Wolfe's last despatch to, iii 113, 116, 13, 167; in 177, 191, 211, 216, 217, 220, disliked by George III, iii 237, supports the Continental War, iii. 237, rising opposition to, iii. 238, letter from Stanley to, iii 240, arrogance of, iii 241, rejects Choiseul's overtures, iii. 241, divines the secret treaty between France and Spain, iii 243; his plan to humble the House of Bourbon, iii 243; not supported by the ministry, iii 243, 244; resignation of, iii. 244; Granville's reply to, iii 244; iii. 247, 249, 251; his speech on the preliminaries of the Peace of Paris, iii. 253, 254; iii 280, 283, 286
 Pitt, Fort, built by Stanwix, ii. 368.
 Pisiquid, i 98; Dandin, priest of, i. 253
 Pisiquid River, the, i. 278
 Pittsburgh, site of, i 49, 64, 148, 215; ii. 368; iii 77, Stanwix sent to the relief of, iii 78; the French plan to recover, iii 86; in imminent danger, iii. 87. See also Duquesne, Fort.
 Place de la Concorde, the, i 16
 Plassey, the great victory of, won by Clive, ii 251, iii 255
 Plymouth colony, i 255
 Pococke, Admiral Sir George, sails against Havana, iii 248, captures Havana, iii 248
 Ponte aux-Trembles, ii. 223; Carleton lands at, iii 66, Murray repulsed at, iii 106; iii 121; garrison of, iii 187; Rochbeaucourt stationed at, iii 207.
 Point Levi, the heights of, iii. 54.
 Poisson, Jeanne, see Pompador, Madame de
 Poland, King of, see Augustus the Strong
 Polson, Captain, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 236, 238.
 Pomeroy, Mrs Abigail, iii. 79
 Pomeroy, Rev Benjamin, on the expedition against Ticonderoga, iii 79.
 Pomeroy, Daniel, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302, killed in the battle of Lake George, i 322.
 Pomeroy, Mrs. Daniel, letter from Seth Pomeroy to, i 322, 323
 Pomeroy, Lieutenant-Colonel Seth, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302; his letters to his wife, i 302, 316, 317, 323; writes to Israel Williams, i. 304, on the march to Lake George, i 306, on Dieskau's ambush, i. 314, 315, on the battle of Lake George, i. 316, 317; his letter to Rachel Pomeroy, i. 322, 323; on the French losses in the battle of Lake George, i 324; journal of, i 328.
 Pomeroy, Seth (son), i. 302.

- Pomeroy, Mrs Seth, letters from her husband to, i 302, 316, 317.
- Pomeroy, Theodore, i 328
- Pompallour, Madame de, i 4; America owes much to the ambitious vanity of, i 5, her infamous use of her power, i 17, stunted in nothing by Louis XV, i 18, the true ruler of France, i 186, her hatred for Frederic the Great, ii 39, Maria Theresa makes advances to, ii 40, ready to attack Frederic, ii 243, her power, ii 249, never wavers in her spite against Frederic, ii 250, Bougainville's interview with, iii 13, Bernis loses the favor of, iii 239
- Pondicherry, iii 236; the French driven from, iii 247
- Pont a-Buot, the, destruction of, i 257
- Pontbriand, Bishop, at Quebec, iii 108, 119, 153, 173, 288
- Pontiac, i 217, 227, ii 329
- Pontleroy, the engineer, at Ticonderoga, ii 306.
- "Porcupine," the, Jervis in command of, iii 127.
- Portland, town of, i 42, 175 See also Falmouth.
- Portneuf, Robineau de, curé of St Joachim, i 74; iii 105
- Port Royal, i 113. See also Annapolis
- Portugal, Spain sends an army to invade, iii 249, iii 258
- Post, Christian Frederic, mission of, ii 332, his perils, ii 353, his experiences, ii 353-356, accomplishes his errand, ii 355, returns to Fort Augusta, ii 356, second mission of, ii 357, at the Delaware towns, ii 357, 358
- Potomac River, the, i 63, 198, 207.
- Pottawattamie, Indian village of, i 81
- Pottawattamies, the, profess devotion to the French, i 135, at Fort Duquesne, i 217, at Ticonderoga, ii 125, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174, sent to the defence of Fort Duquesne, ii 350
- Pouchot, Captain, i 92, on the hardships of the Ohio enterprise, i 134, on the conduct of Jumonville, i 154, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, rebuilds Niagara, ii 60, in the attack on Oswego, ii 97, 100, on the indifference of the Canadian officers to Indian butchery, ii 198, ii 214, on the official knavery in Canada, ii 283, ii 296, 305, arrives at Ticonderoga, ii 310, 314, on the capture of Fort Frontenac, ii 338, iii 85, in command at Niagara, iii 86, summons aid, iii 87, besieged by Prideaux, iii 87, in extremity, iii 87, succor at hand, iii 88, Johnson demands his surrender, iii 90, terms of capitulation, iii 91, in command at Fort Lévis, iii 216, attacked by Amherst, iii 216, surrenders to the English, iii 216, on the capture of Fort Lévis, iii 216
- Poulariez, Colonel, with Montcalm, iii 134, 147
- Pownall, Governor T, of Massachusetts, on the French in the Ohio valley, i 44, on Gist's exploration of the Ohio country, i 57, on the journal of Christopher Gist, i 62, ii 161; letter from Frye to, ii 202, advises Loudon of the capture of Fort

- William Henry, ii 204; Lou don's reply, ii 205, letter from Christo to, ii 206, makes a report on the condition of Massachusetts, ii 290, iii 278, 279
- Prague, the battle of, ii 214
- Prunio à la Roche, hamlet of, i 41
- Preble, Major Jedediah, i 285
- Presburg, the Diet at, Maria Theresa makes a memorable appeal in, i 21, 22
- Presbyterians, the, in Pennsylvania, i 34; in New York, i 35; dislike felt by the Quakers for, ii 22
- Presqu'isle, i. 93, the Ohio expedition lands at, i. 133, 142, Contrecoeur lands at, i 149, ii 368, 369, iii 87; burned by the French, iii 90
- Presqu'isle, Fort, i 133, 136.
- Privost, the intendant, at Louisbourg, i 109, on the proposition to replace the French priests in Acadia, i 112; on the burning of Beaubassin, i 121, 122, on the murder of Howe, i 121, i 291, 292, sends a memorial to Dinwiddie, ii 278; on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287; on the cost of Le Loutre's intrigues, iii 268
- Prideaux, Brigadier, charged with the attempt to capture Niagara, in 78, iii. 82, his advance, iii 81, at Niagara, iii 85, attacked by La Corne, iii 85; lays siege to Niagara, iii 87, death of, iii 87, iii. 95
- Prince Edward's Island, i. 102, Acadian emigration to, i 113, ii 280
- Princess's Bastion, the, at Louisbourg, ii. 260, 269.
- Pingle, Captain, joins Rogers, ii. 215, a fierce bush fight, ii 216, 217, refuses to escape, ii 217, adventures of, ii. 217-219, his letter to Haviland, ii 219
- Proprietary estates in Pennsylvania, the question of the taxation of, ii 23
- Protestants, the, in Pennsylvania, i 34
- Province Arms, the, in New York, ii 282
- Provinces, the, Dinwiddie exasperated at the supineness of, i. 177
- Provincial army, the, description of, i 302, manners and morals of, i 303
- Provincial camps description of, ii 89
- Provincial commissioners, the, ii 351
- Provincials, the, lack of harmony between the English regulars and, ii 325, 326; Forbes displeased with, ii 343, in Wolfe's expedition to the St Lawrence, iii 22
- "Prudent," the, at Louisbourg, ii 259, 272, captured by the English, ii 274, burned, ii. 274
- Prussia, raised into importance by the House of Brandenburg, i. 19; England makes a defensive treaty with, ii. 39; seeks a guarantee against Russia, ii. 39, the three great Powers leagued against, ii. 41, Sweden and Saxony join against, ii 41; a Protestant nation, ii 41, raised by the Seven Years' War to a first-class Power, ii. 244; crowned with glory, iii 256
- Prussians, the, defeated by the

- Russians, iii 233, defeated at Kunersdorf, iii 233; defeated at Maxen, iii 234, victorious at Liegnitz, iii 235; victorious at Toigau, iii 235
- Puritan colonies, the, i 30
- Puritanism, not an unmixed blessing, i 29
- Putnam, Major Isiael, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302, as a scout, ii 115, 116, with Howe at Ticonderoga, ii 303, at Fort Anne, ii 329; attacked by Marin, ii 330, captured by the Indians, ii 331, his adventures, ii 332-334
- Puisieux, Marquis de, takes his cue from Madame de Pompadour, i 17.
- Pynchon, Doctor, on the battle of Lake George, i 317
- Pyrrhic dance, the, of the Greeks, ii 95
- QUAKER ASSEMBLY, the, refuses to protect the proprietary estates, ii 23 See also Pennsylvania Assembly, the.
- Quakers, the, in Pennsylvania, i 33, 34, 200; Philadelphia takes its stamp from, ii 22; their dislike for the Presbyterians, ii 22, held it to be sinful to fight against the Indians, ii 22, in Philadelphia, ii 24, consider Braddock's defeat a just judgment, ii 25; their struggle against the governor, ii 26-33, forced to yield, ii 34
- Quebec, need of winter communication between Cape Breton and, i 128, i 131, 191, 192, 247, 251, Le Loutre at, i 261, Charlevoix's account of, ii 47, Montcalm at, ii 51, Shirley's plan to attack, ii 68; the plan abandoned, ii 69, Montcalm's opinion of, ii 144; Montcalm in, ii 211, ii 237, Pitt's plan to capture, ii 253, impatience of Wolfe to attack, ii 285, census of, iii 17; Wolfe named by Pitt to lead the expedition against, iii 31; French preparations for the defence of, iii 36-44, garrison of, iii 43; impatience at, iii 44, arrival of the English fleet, iii 45, a natural fortress, iii 51; weakened by the absence of Lévis, iii 108; iii 123, 128, 133, 150, 151; abandoned by Vaudreuil to its fate, iii 151, iii 158, Townshend pushes his attack on, iii 159; surrenders to the English, iii 160; the terms of capitulation, iii 161, Vaudreuil to blame for the loss of, iii 160; occupied by the English, iii 161, Murray in command of, iii 161, Ramesay blamed by Vaudreuil for the surrender of, iii 162, iii 168, after the siege, iii 172, 173, swarms with troops, iii 173; Murray's humane command in, iii 176, winter at, iii 178; rumors of the approach of Lévis, iii 180; iii 182, disease and death at, iii 185, French hopes of recovering, iii 185; Lévis sets out against, iii 186, iii 190; its fate trembles in the balance, iii 198, Murray strengthens the defences of, iii 198, relief arrives at, iii 201, the siege raised, iii 203, retreat of the French, iii 203; iii 231, force of the French and English at, iii 285
- Quebec, the Basin of, iii 55, 63, 69, Saunders in, iii 125.

- Quebec, the batteries of, iii 65;
the "Sutherland" passes, iii 66
- Quebec, the battle of, iii. 139-141
- Quebec, the Bishop of, i 111,
Cornwallis expresses his indignation towards the French priests to, i 111, 112, thinks Le Loutre too violent, i. 119; receives Le Loutre with reproaches, i 261, his relations with the Acadians, i 265, i 269, on the French preparations, iii 37
- Quebec, the diocese of, i 98.
- Quebec militia, the, iii 43
- Quebec, the plateau of, iii. 188
- Quebec, the Rock of, i 24, 44, iii 18, 41, 54.
- Queen's Bastion, the, at Louis-
bourg, ii. 260, 273
- Queen's Battery, the, at Quebec,
iii 50
- Quoidisien-Tremat, sent to Canada to make investigation, ii 241; his discoveries, ii 241; on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287.
- RACE, CAPE, i 192
- "Racehorse," the frigate, iii 188, 203.
- "Rake's Progress," the, i 9
- Rameau, on the Canadian population, i. 23; on the Acadian emigration, i 244.
- Ramesny, Chevalier de, in command at Quebec, iii 43; Montcalm asks aid from, iii 136, iii 138; Montcalm's last words to, iii 152; iii 154; Vaudreuil's letters to, iii. 154, 155; his despondency, iii 155, 156; receives a petition asking him to capita-late, iii 156, a council of war, iii 156; forced to capitulate, iii 159, 160; the terms of capitation, iii 161, blamed by Vaudreuil for the surrender of Quebec, iii 162, iii 170, 191.
- Ramsay, R. A., iii. 101
- Ranelagh Gardens, i. 9.
- Rapide Plat, the, Amherst descends, iii 217
- "Rascal, Fort," see New Oswego.
- Rattlesnake Hill, ii 308
- Rattlesnakes, i 76.
- Raymond, Comte de, French commander on the Naumec, i. 55; sinister tidings from, i 87, letters of, i 88, i 89, commander at Cape Breton, i 100, his instructions concerning Acadia, i.
106, 110, instructed by the King to encourage the missionaries to urge the Indians to attack the English, iii 267
- Raynal, Abbé, makes an ideal picture of the Acadians, i 268.
- Raystown, hamlet of, ii 341, 345,
349, 363, 365
- Rea, Dr. Caleb, in Bagley's Massachusetts regiment, ii 323, his diary, ii 323; his choir, ii 323;
on the provincial chaplains, ii 321, his abhorrence of profanity, ii 324, 325, on the lack of harmony between the regulars and the provincials, i 325, 326.
- Reading (Penn.), in preparation for an attack by the Indians,
ii 30
- Récollets, the, at Quebec, iii 50, church of, iii 173
- Red Head, chief sachem at Onondaga, ii. 78, death of, ii 78
- Redstone Creek, i 150, Dinwiddie orders a rendezvous at, i 150;
storehouse of the Ohio Company at, i 161; the storehouse burned by Villiers, i 167.
- Regulars, the English, lack of har- mony between the provincials and, ii 325, 326.

- Rennes, Montcalm at, ii. 48
- Repentigny, Lieutenant, ii 232 ; at Quebec, iii 59, 60, stationed at Jacques-Cartier, iii. 207.
- Restoration, the, i. 7
- Revolutionary War, the, see War of Independence.
- Rhine, the, i 19
- Rhine countries, the, iii. 246.
- Rhode Island, colony of, i. 28 ; features of, i 28, joins Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 297 ; Parliament makes a grant to, ii. 69.
- Rhode Island regiment, the, with Abercrombie, ii 299
- Rhode Island troops, the, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 303
- Richelieu, Marshal, supreme in the arts of gallantry, i 12, ii 252
- Richelieu River, the, i 300 ; ii 64, 115, 141 ; iii. 43, 92, 177
- "Richmond," the frigate, iii 47.
- Rickson, Lieutenant-Colonel, letter from Wolfe to, iii 31
- Rigaud, Pierre François, brother of the Marquis de Vaudreuil, in the expedition against Oswego, ii 95, 96, 99, holds chief command of expedition against Fort William Henry, ii 136 ; the attack, ii. 136-138, his retreat, ii 139 ; ii 148, 151 ; among the Mission Indians, ii. 164 ; at Ticonderoga, ii. 174 ; governor of Three Rivers, ii 224 ; official knavery of, ii. 231 ; ii 292, iii 92 ; on the force of French and English at Quebec, iii. 286
- Rigaud, Madame de, ii 224.
- Rimouski, county of, i. 131.
- "Rappon," the, iii. 288.
- Rivière à la Roche, see Miami River
- Rivière aux Boeufs, i 133
- Roanoke, i. 62
- Robison, John, on Wolfe at the Heights of Abraham, iii 129
- Robinson, Sir Thomas, i 182, incapacity of, i. 186 ; i 188, dissimulation, i 190, i 192, 193 ; letters from Shirley to, i 200, 229, letters from Braddock to, i 205, 207, letter from Sinclair to, i. 229, instructs Shirley to attack the French, i 249, i 256 ; letter from Morris to, ii 25.
- Rochbeaucourt, stationed at Pointe-aux-Trembles, iii 207
- Roche, Lieutenant, joins Rogers, ii 215, a fierce bush-fight, ii. 216, 217, refuses to escape, ii. 217, adventures of, ii 217-219
- Rocheblave, M de, iii 272
- Rocheport, i 189, 190, Pitt sends an expedition to attack, ii 250, 253, iii. 29
- Rochester, city of, i 76
- Rocky Mountains, the, i 22, 135
- Rodney, Admiral, sails for Martinique, iii 248 ; joined by Monckton, iii 248, seizes Martinique, iii 248.
- Rogers, Lieutenant Richard, ii 120 ; death of, ii 208
- Rogers, Captain Robert, the partisan chief, makes a report on Ticonderoga, ii. 77, in Winslow's camp, ii 118 ; sketch of, ii 119 ; exploits of, ii. 121-125, his report to Johnson, ii. 124, perplexes the French, ii 125, on a scouting expedition, ii 129, 130 ; a desperate bush-fight, ii 131 ; wounded, ii 132 ; on the losses sustained by both sides, ii 133 ; makes a raid

- against the French, ii 215; a fierce bush-fight, ii 216, 217; defeated, ii 217, his detailed report of the fight, ii 219, his escape, ii 220; ii 296, with Abercrombie, ii 299, 300, 301, 303, on the death of Howe, ii 304; on the defences at Ticonderoga, ii 307, sent to cut off the French, ii 328; his lack of caution, ii 329, attacked by Marin, ii 330; the battle near Fort Anne, ii 331, iii 5, sent to punish the St Francis Indians, in 93, 95; Amherst's instructions to, iii 96, his expedition, iii 97; his success, iii 98, on the sufferings of the rangers, iii 99, reaches "Number Four," iii 100, at Isle-aux-Noix, iii 214; on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 214, 215
- Rogers' rangers, ii 115, at Lake George, ii 120; their life, ii 120, a desperate bush fight, ii 131-133, letter of thanks from Abercrombie to, ii 133, with Abercrombie, ii 299, iii 93, sent against the St Francis Indians, iii 93, 95; their success, iii 98, their sufferings, iii 99; at Isle aux-Noix, iii 214.
- Rogers' Rock, ii 117, 129, 166, 173, 215, 218, 220, 300, 302
- Rollo, Lord, sent to Isle St Jean, ii 284, advances against Canada, iii 209.
- Roma, testifies to the mildness of British rule in Acadia, i 100, on the Acadian emigration, i 113; iii 265
- Roman Catholic orthodoxy, in Canada, i. 23.
- Roman Catholics, the, in Maryland, i 36, i 200
- Romanists, the, in Pennsylvania, i 34.
- "Roman politique," amusing absurdity of, i 132
- Rome, the myrmidons of, i 304
- Rome (N. Y.), city of, ii. 7.
- Roquemaure, i. 309, stationed at St John, iii 213, joined by Bougainville, iii 214, crosses to Montreal, iii 218
- Rose, Captain, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 236
- Rosbach, Frederic of Prussia wins at, ii 245, 251; begins the re-creation of Germany, iii 255
- Rostang, i 190, death of, i 193
- Roubaud, Jesuit missionary of the Abenakis of St Francis, describes a war-feast of the Mission Indians, ii 168-170, his description of cannibalism, ii 171, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175; a night alarm, ii 181, on the Indian butchery at Fort William Henry, ii 194, 201, 202, 203, on the Indian allies, ii 203, iii 166; character of, iii 170
- Rouillé, the minister, i 69, letter from La Jonquière concerning the Acadian oath of allegiance, i 103; his letter to Desherbiers, i 105, Longueuil complains to, i 107, Bigot reports to, i 108; Prevost writes to, i 109; his covert instructions to Raymond, i 110; his letter to La Jonquière, i 110
- Roundheads, the, i 31.
- Rous, Captain, captures the "St François," i 120; in Shuley's expedition against the French,

- i 256; reaches Annapolis, i 256; on the attack on Fort Beauséjour, i 259, sent to capture French post on the St John, i 262
- Rousseau, i. 18, school of, i 132
- Royal Americans, the, with Abercrombie, ii 299, 307, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii. 340; in Grant's expedition, ii 359, ii 367, at Quebec, iii 73, 74, then losses, iii 75; on the Heights of Abraham, iii 183, in the battle of Quebec, iii 142
- Royal Battery, the, at Quebec, iii 50
- Royal Roussillon, the regiment of, destined for Canada, ii 49, sent to Ticonderoga, ii 64, at Ticonderoga, ii 165, 310, 313; in Montcalm's expedition, ii. 180, at Quebec, iii 72, 135
- "Royal William," the, iii 162
- Ruggles, in the battle of Lake George, i 318
- Ruggles's Massachusetts regiment, iii. 79, 225
- Rumeeau St-Denis, iii 131
- Russia, Prussia seeks a guarantee against, ii 39; Maria Theresa joins herself in secret league with, ii 40; joins Austria and France against Prussia, ii 41, 243, becomes the ally of Prussia, iii 245
- Russia, Empress of, see Elizabeth of Russia
- Russians, the, flee before Frederick of Prussia, iii 233; defeat General Wedell, iii 233
- Rutherford, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, on the siege of Niagara, iii 87
- Ryswick, the treaty of, i 47.
- SABBATH DAY POINT, ii 172, 300
- Sabievois, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 175
- Sackett's Harbor, ii 95
- Sacs, the, profess devotion to the French, i. 133, at Montcalm's grand council, ii 174.
- Saint-Ange, in command at Vincennes, i 87
- St Augustin, iii 152, Lévis at, iii 159, 187, iii 182
- Saint-Blin, ii 241.
- St Charles River, the, ii 225; iii 41, 42, 50, 128, 133, 134, 135, 141, 144, 145, 149, 151, 158, 193, 285
- Saint-Clerc, Benoit de, i. 88
- Saint-Florentin, Comte de, takes his cue from Madame de Pompadour, i 17
- St Francis, the mission of, i 216, ii 58, 353; iii 97, destruction of, iii 98, iii 170
- St Francis Indians, the, iii 98
- St Francis River, the, iii 96, 97, 99.
- "St François," the French armed brig, captured by the English, i 120
- St Helen, the Island of, iii 221
- Saint-Ignace, Mère Aimable Dubé de, iii 292
- St Jean, Fort, i 26
- St, Joachim, the parish of, burned by Wolfe, iii 104
- St John, the suburb of, ii 115, iii 146, Roquemaure stationed at, iii 213; Bougainville cut off from communication with, iii 214, abandoned by the French, iii 214
- St John, Fort, ii 141
- St John, the gate of, at Quebec, iii 135, 144
- St John River, the, i. 120, 250;

- French post at the mouth of, i 262; i 292, 294; ii 284, iii 231
- St John's, captured by the French, iii 219, retaken by the English, iii 249.
- St Joseph River, the, i 44
- Saint-Julien, Lieutenant-Colonel de, at Louisbourg, ii 261.
- Saint-Lamons, ii 153
- St Laurent, the church of, on the Island of Orleans, iii 49.
- St Lawrence, Gulf of, i 42, 119, ii 285, 286, iii 230, 252
- St Lawrence Rapids, the, iii 84, 85
- St Lawrence River, the, i 5, seized by the French, i 22, i 25, rapids of, i 41, i 69, 72, 93, 128, 130, 131, Montcalm on, ii 51, ii 141, 211, 284, watched by British ships, iii 11, iii 14, 16, 18; Wolfe's expedition to, iii 22, iii 32, 34, La Corno sent to, iii 36, iii 39, 41, 42, 43, 45, 50, 52, 55, 58, 61, 62, 70, 76, 91, 95, 96, 129, 133, 148, 152, 188, 200, 201, complete blockade of, iii 207, Murray to ascend, iii 207, iii 214, 230, 252
- St Lawrence River, the Lower, i 4.
- St Lawrence River, the Upper, i 4
- St. Louis, site of, i 41.
- St Louis, the gate of, at Quebec, iii 135, 141, 144, 191, 198
- St. Louis, Lake, iii 217
- St. Louis Street, in Quebec, iii 200
- St. Lucia, captured by the English, iii 248; restored to France, iii 252
- St Malo, ii 237, 252
- St Michel, the heights of, iii 110
- St Nicolas, the village of, iii 123
- Saint-Ours, militia of, in Montcalm's expedition, ii 180
- Saint-Ours, Madame de, ii 116.
- St Paul, sacked and burned by Wolfe, iii 101.
- St Peter, the islands of, iii 210
- St Petersburg, ii 212
- St Philippe, hamlet of, i 44.
- St Pierre, the Island of, iii 252
- Saint-Pierre, Jacques, Logardieur de, ordered to the Ohio by Duquesne, i 135, arrives at Fort Le Boeuf, i 136, Washington brings a letter from Duwiddie to, i 137, 139, 140, Washington's description of, i 139, his reply to Duwiddie, i 140, his reception of Washington, i 140, tries to win over the Half-King, i 140, in command of Indian allies, i 308, death of, i 315
- St Roch, iii 61, 111, 155, 190
- St Sacrament, Lac, see George, Lake.
- St. Servan, captured by the English, ii 252
- Saint-Veran, Louis Joseph, Marquis de Montcalm-Gozon de, see Montcalm, Louis de
- Saint-Veran, Madame de, mother of Montcalm, letters from Montcalm to, ii 47, 48, 58, 142, 145, 152, 212, iii 3, 13, 15, letters from Bougainville to, iii 15, 16, 20
- St Vincent, captured by the English, iii 248, 252.
- St Vincent, Earl, in command of the "Porcupine," iii 127, with Wolfe at Quebec, iii 127.
- St Yotoc, see Scoto
- Ste Anne de-la-Pérade, ii 224
- Sainte Claude, Mère de, Superior of the Hospital nuns, iii 176.

- Ste-Foy, iii. 150, 178; fortified outpost at, in 180, Lévis before, in 187, 188, reinforced by Murray, in. 190, Murray attacks Lévis at, in 193, the battle, in 195, retreat of the English, in 195; the losses, in 197, authorities on the battle of, in 204, in 228, strength of the French and English at the battle of, in 292
- Ste Hélène, Isle, in 146
- Sto Marie, Fort, becomes a post of war, i 80.
- Samos, French post of, in 119, 130, silenced by the English, in 132, in 134
- Saratoga, i 180, in 75, 88, 140
- Sardinia, King of, i 21.
- Sargent, Mr., on Braddock in Gibraltar, i 197, on Hanbury, i 204, on Orme, i 210, on the Indians at Fort Cumberland, i 211, on the battle of Monongahela, i 223
- Saul, George, the commissary, i 288, 289
- Saunders, Admiral, in 32, 35, 111, 117, in the Basin of Quebec, in 125, his pretended attack, in 125, 126; on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, in 130, in 134, returns home, in 162
- Saut St Louis, i 216, in 162, 164
- Saut St Louis Indians, the, join the French against the English, i 159
- "Sauvage," the, ii 49
- Save, Marshal, i 12, 14, on Mirepoix, i 186, death of, i 187, i 189, 319, 322.
- Saxony, joins the three great Powers against Prussia, in. 41, 244, Frederic of Prussia marches into, in 243
- Saxony, Elector of, see Augustus the Strong
- Scarroyaddy, the famous chief, i 211
- Schenectady, Dutch village of, Shuley at, in 6, in 210, Vaudrenil plans to threaten, in 292
- Schools, free, opposed by Sir William Berkaley, i 32
- Schuyler, Colonel, ii 4, 82, 304, 334
- Schuyler, Mrs., in 4, 5, fondness for Howe, in 297; learns of his death, in 304
- Schuylers, the, in New York, i 35.
- Schweinitz, i 58
- Scioto, Shawanoe town of, Bienville at, i 52
- Scioto River, the, i 59
- Scotch Highlanders, the, ii 254, ordered to America, in 254
- Scotch-Irish, the, at Logstown, i 57
- Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, the, in Pennsylvania, in 25
- Scotland, in 254
- Scott, i 146
- Scott, Captain George, letter from Pichon to, i 253, in Shirley's regiment, i 255, in the attack on Fort Beauséjour, i 258, 261; at Beauséjour, i 263, at Louisbourg, in 265
- Scouts, the, in 115.
- Second Church, the, in Lancaster, in 224
- Second Narrows, in 300.
- Ségur, Count, i 19
- Seminary, the, at Montreal, ii. 217
- Seminary, the, at Quebec, garden of, in 50; in 56
- Seneca Lake, i 58
- Senecas, the, i 47, La Galissonière's message to, i 47, promise

- compliance to the French, i 48, i. 69, at Niagara, i. 74, 75, Joncaire gains over most of, i. 178, ii. 352
- Senegal, seized by the English, ii. 253
- Senegal country, the, taken from the French, iii. 247, ceded by France, iii 252
- Senezorgues, Brigadier, mortally wounded, iii 148
- Seven Years' War, the, i 3; made England what she is, i. 5, ruins France in two continents, i 5, raises Prussia to a first-class Power, ii 244; deportment of British officers in, ii. 326, end of, iii 254, loss of life in, iii 256, uselessness of, iii 256
- Sewell, Colonel Matthew, on Dickson, i 322
- Shades of Death, the, i 213
- Sharpe, Governor, of Maryland, summoned to Alexandria by Braddock, i 199; i 209
- Shawanoes on the Alleghany, the, profess devotion to the French, i. 135.
- Shawanoes, the, in the Ohio valley, i. 48; villages of, i 48, 52, i. 49; Bienville among, i. 52; their rough treatment of Joncaire, i. 52, 53; i 61, hearty in the English cause, i 62, i 210; at Fort Duquesne, i. 217; set on by Dumas to attack the border settlements, ii. 14; pledge themselves to the English, ii. 79, Governor Morris declares war against, ii 80, Governor Belcher declares war against, ii. 80; Forbes tries to win over, ii 351; wavering, ii. 352; join the English, ii 359
- Shea, J. G., i. 218, 221, 229.
- Shebbeare, Dr., a political pamphleteer, on Hanbury, i. 204
- Shenango, i 49
- Shepherd, Captain, escape of, ii. 122.
- "Shoppard, Jack," i 9
- Sheibrooke, town of, iii 101
- Shingns, receives Post, ii 353.
- Shippensburg, Forbes at, ii 344, 351
- Shirley, Captain John, in the Niagara expedition, ii 8, his letters to Governor Morris, ii 8, 9, 11, death of, ii 9, insists on taking Frontenac before attempting Niagara, ii. 10
- Shuley, Fort, ii 111.
- Shirley, William, governor of Massachusetts, English commissioner on the question of American boundaries between France and England, i 128; i 146, returns to America, i 175, characteristics of, i. 175, secures a large grant of money from his Assembly for protection against the French, i. 175, sends Winslow to the Kennebec, i. 175, attitude of, i. 177; on the Albany plan of union, i 182; builds Fort Halifax, i 190; summoned by Braddock to Alexandria, i. 198; his second marriage, i. 199; his plans for expelling the French, i 199; paints the dangers besetting the British colonies, i 200; in the front of opposition to French designs, i. 201, debt of gratitude due to, i. 201; plan of campaign settled upon, i 201; assumes the command of expedition against Niagara, i 201; on the defeat of Braddock, i. 229, on the conduct of Dunbar, i. 241; becomes commander in chief, i 241, determines to renew offensive operations, i 241, his project for purging Acadia of French influence, i 243, letter from Governor Lawrence to, i 248, offers to assist Lawrence against the French, i 249, instructed by Robinson to attack the French, i 249, plans to anticipate the French, i 250, active preparations, i 254, commissions Winslow to raise volunteers, i 254; forms a regiment, i 255; his fleet sails, i 256, arrives at Beauséjour, i 256, felt the necessity of ridding Acadia of the Acadians, i 266; his plan to attack Crown Point, i 296, puts William Johnson in command, i 297, delays, i 301; the expedition a failure, i 325, urges Johnson to capture Ticonderoga, i 325, sets out on the Niagara expedition, ii 4, arrives at Albany, ii 4; up the Mohawk, ii 5, make-up of his force, ii 5, at Schenectady, ii 6, at the Great Carrying Place, ii 6; at Wood Creek, ii 7; on Lake Oneida, ii 7, learns of Brad-dock's defeat, ii 8, learns of his son's death, ii 8, death of his second son, ii 9, letter of condolence from Governor Morris to, ii 9, difficulties, ii 10; holds a council of war, ii 11, abandons the expedition, ii 11, 12; returns to Albany, ii 12; his falling out with Johnson, ii 12; diverts the New Jersey regiment from Crown Point to Niagara, ii 12, encroaches on Johnson's office of Indian superintendent, ii 12, holds conferences with the Five Nations, ii 12; Johnson inveighs against the Indian agents of, ii 12, Governor Delancey takes umbrage at, ii 13, letters from Morris on the Quaker attitude to, ii 25, 27, ii 60; on the destruction of Fort Bull, ii 62, calls a council of war in New York, ii 68, his plan for a new campaign, ii 68, New England doubtful of the military abilities of, ii 69; Parliament makes a grant for his new campaign, ii 69, completing his plans, ii 70, a heavy blow, ii 70, removed by the ministry, ii 70, his eclipse, ii 71, rebuilds the fort at the Great Carrying Place, ii 71, longs for the aid of the Five Nations against Niagara and Frontenac, ii 80, his company of boatmen, ii 80, on Bradstreet's flight, ii 83, Bradstreet's success temporarily silences the enemies of, ii 84, redoubled cares of, ii 84, reinforces Oswego, ii 86, resigns his command, ii 86, meets Lord Loudon in New York, ii 86, on the Oswego defences, ii 86, urges Winslow to preserve harmony with Loudon, ii 88, correspondence of, ii 88; accused by Loudon of leaving Oswego weakly garrisoned, ii 101; on the capture of Oswego, ii 103, wreck of his scheme for cutting New France in twain, ii 104, reasons for his failure, ii 104, 105; the opposing force, ii 105, 106; blamed by Loudon for the loss of Oswego, ii 107, ordered to England, ii 107, his reply, ii 107, Franklin's opinion of, ii 108; sails for England, ii 108, made governor of the Bahamas, ii 108, on the

- exploits of Robert Rogers, ii 124, letter from Winslow to, ii 126, ii 335, iii 226
- Shurley, William (son), Braddock's secretary, on the character of Braddock, i. 195, his letters to Governor Morris, i 195, 209, at Alexandria, i 198, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 227, 238; ii 8
- Shurley's regiment, to attack Niagara, i. 201, composition of, i 255; in the Niagara expedition, ii 6, at Fort Bull, ii 61, in Shirley's new campaign, ii 70, comes to Bradstreet's assistance, ii 82, at Fort Pepperell, ii 99
- Short, Richard, views in Quebec drawn by, iii 173.
- Shubenacadie River, the, Le Centre's mission on the banks of, i. 118.
- Shuckburgh, Dr, i 135.
- Shute, John, ii 132
- Silesia, province of, seized by Frederic of Prussia, i 21; Frederic the Great robs Maria Theresa of, ii 39, the Austrians take, ii 245
- Silhouette, French commissioner on the question of American boundaries between France and England, i. 128
- Sillery, in 56, 117, 120; taken by the English, iii. 132; iii 177, 189, 190, 294
- Sillery Wood, iii 192
- Sinclair, Sir John, angry at the apathy of Pennsylvania, i 205, i 222, wounded in the battle of Monongahela, i 227; on the defeat of Braddock, i 229; in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 342, 345, 316, inefficiency of, ii 347.
- Simoto, see Scioto
- "Snen," the, i 256.
- "Sizene," the, ii 49.
- Six Nations, the, i 61. See also Five Nations of the Iroquois, the
- Slavery, in Virginia, i. 32.
- Slaves, in the provinces, i 200, 237; in Virginia, ii 16
- Small-pox, i 88, ii. 127, 193, 208, 238
- Smith, James, captured by the Indians, i 217; at Fort Duquesne, i 218, 219, on the battle of Monongahela, i 229-231
- Smith, John, i 236
- Smith, William, on the character of the provincial army, i 303, on the Pennsylvanian disputes, ii 36, on the Shirley-Johnson-Delaney dispute, ii 14, on the quarrel over quartering troops, ii 128, on Loudon, ii 205; on Vandoeuil's jealousy of Montcalm, ii 206, ii 242, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 205; on Amherst's expedition against Canada, iii 218
- Smith, William, of Rhode Island, at Ticonderoga, ii 314.
- Smollett, i. 9, 165; ridicules the Duke of Newcastle, i 185; on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, iii 130
- Smyth, the English traveller, on Williamsburg, i. 170, on Virginian life, i 170.
- Sodus Bay, Father Piquet at, i 76
- Somervogel, on Dumas and his pupil Montcalm, ii 44; on Montcalm, ii 16.
- Sorel, the town of, Murray at, iii 210, Bourlamaque in command at, iii 210
- Soto, De, see De Soto.
- Soubise, i 12.

- South Bay, i 306, 307, 310, 312, 324; ii 75, 89, 123, 185, 328, iii 83
- South Carolina, colony of, i 36, sends commissioners to Albany, i 65, Dinwiddie appeals for aid against the French to, i 146; responds to the appeal, i 147, 157, Glen governor of, i 183
- Spain, House of Bourbon holds the throne of, i 12, iii 241, Carlos III becomes King of, iii 242, a change in policy, iii 242, the "Family Compact," iii 242, England declares war against, iii 247; regrets her rash compact with France, iii 249, invades Portugal, iii 249, receives back Havana, and cedes Florida, iii 252, New Orleans and Louisiana made over to, iii 253, sinking into decay, iii 258
- Sparks, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156, on the fight at Great Meadows, i 164, on the capitulation at Fort Necessity, iii 270
- Speakman, Captain, i 286
- Spikeman, Captain, ii 129, 130, death of, ii 131
- Spithead, iii 32
- Split, Cape, i 277
- Stanhope, Earl, on Wolfe, iii 35
- Stanley, on the character of Choiseul, iii 240, sent as envoy to Versailles, iii 241, iii 250.
- Stanley, Dean, on the legend of Ticonderoga, iii 281, 284.
- Stanwix, Brigadier, at Fort Frontenac, ii 336; builds Fort Pitt, ii 368, sent to the relief of Pittsburg, iii 78, 87, on the siege of Niagara, iii 87
- Stanwix, Fort, iii 84.
- Stark, Caleb, on the defeat of the rangers, ii 133, on Rigaud's attack on Fort William Henry, ii 139
- Stark, Lieutenant John, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302; the hero of Bennington, i 302, ii 120, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, slightly wounded, ii 139, at Ticonderoga, ii 300
- Stephen, Captain Adam, on Washington's attack on Jumonville, i 156, on the fight at Great Meadows, i 164; on the death of Jumonville, iii 269.
- Stephen, Lieutenant, iii 99
- Stephen, Lieutenant-Colonel, ii 347
- Sterne, i 9
- Stevens, an Indian interpreter, i 299, escapes from Quebec, ii 121.
- Stevenson, on card money in Canada, ii 236
- Stewart, Captain, in the battle of Monongahela, i 228
- Still, Isaac, ii 359
- Stillwater, ii 75, 140
- Stirling, Wolfe at, iii 25
- Stobo, Major Robert, held by the French as hostage, i 165, on Fort Duquesne, i 216, arrives at Quebec, iii 121.
- Stockbridge, iii 98
- Stone, William L, i 328; ii 123; iii 79, on the capture of Niagara, iii 91, iii 92.
- Stuarts, the, receive their death-blow, i 8, ii 254, iii 238.
- Subaltern officers, the French, ii 55
- "Success," the, i 256
- Suffield (Conn.), ii 90
- Sulpitian Fathers, the, ii 146; missions of, ii 353.

Superior, Lake, i 80, ii 58
 Surgeons, provincial, ii. 327
 Susane, on the French subaltern officers, ii 55; on the troupes de la marine, ii, 56
 Susquehanna River, the, Indian massacres on, ii. 28, 29.
 Susquehanna River, the Upper, ii 352
 "Sutherland," the, passes the batteries of Quebec, iii 66; Wolfe's flagship, iii. 123, 127.
 Sweden, joins the three great Powers against Prussia, ii 41, 244, iii. 246
 Swedes, the, in Pennsylvania, i. 38.
 Sydney, see Espagnol, Port.
 TADOUSSAC, trading post of, i 131.
 Tantemar, marsh of, i. 125, 251, 263, 264, iii 21
 Tassé, on the Abbé Piquet, i 71; on Langlade, iii 273.
 Tatten, Captain, killed in the battle of Monongahela, i 236
 Teedyuscung, the Delaware chief, ii 352.
 Temple, Lord, on Wolfe, iii. 35; iii 243.
 "Tellor of France," the, at Quebec, iii. 117.
 Thackeray, on Granville's reply to Pitt, iii 244
 Thames River, the, iii 47.
 Thomas, Surgeon John, in the attack on Fort Beauséjour, i. 258, journal of, i 258, 259, 260
 Thompson, James, at Ste-Foy, iii 196, 197; iii 200, 288
 Thousand Islands, the, i 72, iii 215
 Three Rivers, ii. 224, census of, iii 17; militia of, iii 43, 107, iii. 156, 187, 206, 209
 Ticonderoga, the battle of, ii 311-317.

Ticonderoga, Dieskan at, i 308, 309, 310, Johnson urged to capture, i 324, ii. 36, fortified by Lotbinière, ii 60, the battalions of La Roche and Languedoc at, ii 62, the Royal Roussillon battalion sent to, ii 64, Montcalm and Lévis hasten to, ii 64; the most advanced position of the French, ii 65; Lévis in command at, ii. 65, Shirley's plan to attack, ii 68, 76; Captain Rogers makes a report on, ii. 77; ii 86, Loudon turns his whole force against, ii. 87; Montcalm recalled from, ii. 94; left in the keeping of Lévis, ii 94; the French plan to concentrate their forces at, ii 102, Montcalm forces Winslow at, ii. 108; a hornet's nest, ii 115; encampments of, ii. 116, ii. 121, 122, 123, 129, 130, 132; Lussignan commandant at, ii. 133; Rigaud at, ii 136, ii 141, Montcalm's force at, ii. 165; description of its location, ii 165; martial population of, ii 166, Captain Hebecourt at, ii. 214, 215, 216, ii 219; Pitt's plan to capture, ii. 253; Abercrombie gathers his forces to march against, ii. 292, Vaudreuil's plan for saving, ii 292; Montcalm decides to remain at, ii 293; location of, ii. 305, the French defences at, ii. 307, the assault, ii 311; defeat of Abercrombie, ii. 316, the losses, ii. 317; ii 371; Boullamaque sent to, iii 36; Amherst marches against, iii. 51, 64, 78; in 54, 77; Boullamaque makes no attempt to defend, iii 80, blown up, iii 81, iii. 108, 165;

- French accounts of the battle of, iii. 279, English accounts of the battle of, iii. 279, the losses at, iii. 280, a legend of, iii. 281.
- Ticonderoga, Fort, description of, ii. 65
- "Tilden's Poems," i. 329
- Titcomb, Colonel Moses, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i. 301; at Louisbourg, i. 301, in the battle of Lake George, i. 318
- Tobago, the Island of, iii. 252
- "Tomahawk Camp," ii. 370.
- "Tom Jones," i. 9
- Tongue Mountain, ii. 180
- Torgau, Frederic of Prussia victorious at, iii. 235
- Toronto, Father Piquet at, i. 73, in danger, i. 88
- Toronto, Fort, Shirley's plan to seize, ii. 68
- Tory squires, the, in England, i. 8
- Toulon, ii. 254
- Tourmente, Cape, iii. 45
- Tournois, Father, at Caughnawaga, i. 68; ordered to Quebec, i. 69
- Tourville, commander of the "Capricieux," ii. 287, his diary on the siege of Louisbourg, ii. 287
- Townshend, Charles, i. 10; made Secretary of War, iii. 239
- Townshend, Brigadier George, in command at Fort Herkimer, ii. 210; in Wolfe's expedition, iii. 33; Walpole's estimate of, iii. 33; death of, iii. 81; letter from Wolfe to, iii. 109, iii. 117, on the Heights of Abraham, iii. 133; on the force of the English and French at the battle of Quebec, iii. 142, succeeds Wolfe in command, iii. 142, 148, Montcalm's letter to, iii. 153, pushes his attack on Quebec, iii. 159, Ramesay surrenders to, iii. 160; the terms of capitulation, iii. 161, occupies Quebec, iii. 161, returns home, iii. 161; claims more than his share of the victory, iii. 161; iii. 288
- Townshend's brigade, at Quebec, iii. 58, 138
- Tracy, Lieutenant, ii. 330
- Trahan, Joseph, on Montcalm, iii. 137
- Traverse, the, iii. 45, the English fleet passing, iii. 47
- "Trent," the, at Louisbourg, ii. 263
- Trent, William, the Indian trader, i. 45, on the attack on Pickawillany, i. 90, made lieutenant in the Virginia militia, i. 144, 148, his backwoodsmen, i. 150; ii. 28
- Trepezec, at Ticonderoga, ii. 300, 301
- Troupes de la marine*, the, ii. 54; form the permanent military establishment of Canada, ii. 55, become ill-disciplined and inefficient, ii. 56, restored to order by Duquesne, ii. 56, description of, ii. 56, their close relation with the colony, ii. 56.
- Troupes de terre*, the, ii. 54
- Trout Brook, ii. 216, 301, 302
- Trumbull, on the Niagara expedition, ii. 12; on the indignation at Abercrombie, ii. 322.
- Truro, i. 98
- Tucker, iii. 127
- Tulpehocken, settlement of, destroyed by the Indians, ii. 33.
- Turenne, i. 12

- Turkey Creek, ii 367
 Turner, Lieutenant, in Rogers' expedition, iii 97, 99
 Turner, Morris, i 84
 "Turpin, Dick," i 9
 Turtle, the clan of, ii 164
 Turtle Creek, i 214
 Tuscaroras, the, join the Five Nations, i 67
 Twilighters, the, see Miamis, the.
 Two Mountains, the, ii 58.
 Two Mountains, the lake of, ii 162
 Two Mountains, the Mission of, i 69; church of, ii 164.
 Tyburn, i 9
 Tyrrell, see Pichon, Thomas
- ULSTER, i 34
 Union, the Albany plan of, i 182
 United Colonies, the, i 33
 United States, the, supplied by the Seven Years' War with the indispensable condition of their greatness, i 6, Wolfe's triumph begins the history of, iii 255; England's glory in giving birth to, iii 258
 Upper Falls, ii 75
 Upper Lakes, the, ii 10.
 Upper Town (Quebec), the, iii 108; Wolfe's plan to attack, iii 110; iii 173
 Upton, Mrs., Braddock's experience with, i 196
 Ursuline convent, the, at Quebec, iii 154
 Ursulines of Quebec, the, on the misery of the Acadians, i 292, ii 81, iii 50, 64, 108, 158, 162, 201
 Utrecht, the Treaty of, i 47, 84; France cedes Acadia to England by, i 95, restores Louisbourg to France, i 96, i 98, 128; declares the Five Nations to be British subjects, i 180; i 245, 265
- VATORS, the, i 16
 Vultry, M. de, at Fort Frontenac, i 78
 Vaubram, Captain, a French interpreter, accompanies Washington to Fort Le Beau, i 138, 141, at Fort Necessity, i 164, sent by Washington to receive Villiers' articles of capitulation, i 164, held as hostage, i 165, iii 268, 269
 "Vanguard," the, arrives at Quebec, iii 202
 Vannes, at Beauséjour, i 258, cowardice of, i 258, i 260.
 Van Rensselaer, manor of, i 35
 Varin, the commissary, on the losses in the fight at Great Meadows, i 165, on the numbers of the French, i 165; ii 225; aspires to supplant Bigot in the intendancy, ii 234; turns informer, ii 234, trial of, ii 241; arrested and tried, iii 231
 Varin, Madame, ii 115, iii 275
 Vaudreuil, Madame de, iii 7, returns to France, iii 230.
 Vaudreuil, Marquis de, on the Canadian population, i 23, the new governor of French America, i 189; on the engagement between the French and English fleets, i 193, Contrecoeur's report on the battle of Monongahela, i 223, 229; defends Vergor in the court martial, i 263, on the cause of the misery of the Acadians, i 276; on Boishébert's attack on Frye, i 286; i 292; succeeds Duquesne, i 299; warned of the English plan to attack Crown Point, i 300; sends Dieskan to Lake Champlain, i 300, his plan to attack Oswego, i 300, on Dies-kau's force at Crown Point, i 308; his report on the battle of Lake George, i 328; meets Montcalm, ii 52, Montcalm not welcome to, ii 52, governor of Louisiana, ii 53, characteristics of, ii 53, compared with Montcalm, ii 53, represents the New France, ii 54, antagonism of his force to that of Montcalm's, ii 54, sends Léry against Fort Bull, ii 61, his report on the destruction of Fort Bull ii 62, Montcalm's estimate of, ii 63, on the Indian raids, ii 75, his conference with the Indians at Montreal, ii 79, sends Villiers to harass Oswego, ii 81, on the defeat of Villiers, ii 84, his plans against Oswego, ii 91, on the capture of Oswego, ii 100, his singular despatch to Versailles, ii 111, his report on the defeat of the rangers, ii 133, his expedition against Fort William Henry, ii 135, ii 144, egotism of, ii 148, 149, claims the honor of taking Oswego, ii 148, his false accusations against the French officer, ii 150, rivalry between Montcalm and, ii 151-151, asks for a reinforcement of French troops, ii 156, ii 173, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 202, his behavior in Louisiana, ii 204, tries to tarnish Montcalm's exploit, ii 206, Bougainville brings him news of the success on Lake George, ii 207, gives license to the Indians, ii 208, 209, attacks German Flats, ii 209, his exaggerated report of Bellet's campaign, ii 210, his life at Montreal, ii 212, Montcalm annoyed by his relations with, ii 212, recommends Lévis to replace Montcalm, ii 213, perfect harmony between Bigot and, ii 222, ii 224, defends Bigot, ii 235; charged with weakness in not preventing Bigot's speculation, ii 239, Montcalm given powers over, ii 240, on the English treatment of prisoners, ii 287, his plan for saving Ticonderoga, ii 292, on the number of the French force at Ticonderoga, ii 311, on the capture of Fort Frontenac ii 318, on the advance of Forbes against Fort Duquesne, ii 330, on Clinton's defeat, ii 363, 364, envious of Montcalm, iii 3, asks for Montcalm's recall, iii 6, his discomfiture, iii 6, disensions, iii 6, 7, his gasconade, iii 10, becomes alarmed, iii 10, his duplicity, iii 12, 13, receives the grand cross of St Louis, iii 13; takes a census, iii 17, his boasts, iii 19, 20, musters his forces, iii 27, his continued beatings, iii 27, hastens to Quebec, iii 39, in praise of Cadet, iii 40, his council at Quebec, iii 41, his quarters at Quebec, iii 43, his relative position to Montcalm, iii 44, on the English fleet passing the Traverse, iii 48, changes his plans, iii 51, the fireship, iii 52, witnesses their failure, iii 53, sanguine of success, iii 54, his letters to Bourlamaque, iii 54, 75, 118, on the attempted night attack, iii 57, iii 60, in a defensive attitude, iii 64, tries again to burn the English fleet, in 68, his failure, in 69, his exaltation, in 75, on the repulse of the English at Montmorency, in 76, orders Boullamague to abandon Ticonderoga and Crown Point, in 80, on Amherst's capture of Ticonderoga, in 82, on the capture of Niagara, in 91, on the destruction of St Francis, in 101, denounces English atrocities, in 105, his own atrocities, in 105, sees his mistake, in 107, breathes more freely, in 109, grows confident, in 117, saves Vergor from disgrace, in 122, in 128, on Wolfe's ascent of the Heights of Abraham, in 130, delays sending his forces to join Montcalm's, in 136; his arrival on the battlefield carefully timed, in 145, throws the blame for defeat on Montcalm, in 145, his consternation, in 146, cowardice of, in 147, on the French loss in the battle of Quebec, in 149; on Bougainville's force, in 149, loses an opportunity, in 150, abandons Quebec to its fate, in 151, in 152, his flight, in 154; his letters to Ramsay, in 154, 155, agrees to the plans of Lévis, in 157, the loss of Quebec due to, in 160, his jealous spite follows Montcalm even after death, in 162-167, retires to Montreal, in 162, blames Ramsay for the surrender of Quebec, in 162, the corruptions of his government, in 164, Montcalm's accusations against, in 167; his trial, in 167; reproaches for, in 174; on the capture of Le Calvaire, in. 182, hopes to recover Quebec, in 185, his plans for attacking Quebec, in 185, 186, on the battle of Ste-Foy, in 201, exerts himself for defence, in 207, issues a counter proclamation, in 212, promises of, in 213, Lévis' relations with, in 213, on Amherst's expedition against Canada, in 214, his letter to Langlade, in 218, holds a council of war, in 219, offers to capitulate, in 219, negotiations, in 219, Amherst inexorable, in 219; accepts the English terms, in 220, reproved by the government, in 222, had no choice but to surrender, in 223, his good qualities, in 223, returns to France, in 230, arrested, in 231, his trial, in. 232; acquitted, in 232, asks for pensions for Contrecoeur and Lagnier, in 270, on the force at Quebec, in 285, on the battle of Quebec, in 287.

Vaudreuil, Philippe de, governor of Canada, in 52.

Vaudreuil, Vicomte de, brother of the governor, in. 222.

Vauquelin, in command of the "Arcturion" at Louisbourg, in. 268, in 186, 202.

Vanvert, in 52.

Vouango, Indian town of, Washington at, i 138, English trading-house at, i 138, seized by the French, i. 138, Joncaire in command, i 138; in. 110, 368, 369; in 87, burned by the French, in. 90.

Vendôme, i 12

Varchères, M de, at Fort Frontenac, i 78

Vergor, Captain Duchambon de, asked by Duquesne to find a

- pretext for attacking the English, i 248, in command of Fort Beausjour, i 251, a confederate of Bigot, i 251, corruption of, i 251, sustains Le Lottie's threats, i 253, learns of the approach of the English, i 256, sends for aid, i 256, his preparations for defence, i 257, attacked by the English, i 258, 259, surrenders i 260, 261, court martialled but acquitted, i 263, the post of, in 119, 121, threatened disgrace of, in 121, 122, his careless defence, in 128, captured by the English, in 130
- Vermont, wilderness of, i 301
- Verner, i 14
- Verreau, Abbé II, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 203, ii 242, on Roubaud, in 170, 171
- Versailles, description of, i 12 14, i 85, 86, 92, 100, 105, 110, 183, 263, ii 46, 47, 114, 162, 236, 237, in 6, 199, 241
- Versailles, the Court of, duplicity of, i 110, 115.
- Vicars, Captain John, on the destruction of Fort Bull, ii 62, on the deplorable condition of Oswego, ii 84, 85, his report on "Fort Rascal," ii 86
- Viger, Hon. D B, in 287
- Viger, Jacques, in 284
- Villars, i 12
- Villiers, Conlon de, sent to Fort Duquesne, i 159, assumes command against the English, i 159, 160, his plan of campaign, i 160, summons the Indians to council, i 161, his march, i 161; at Gist's settlement, i 161, attacks Fort Necessity, i 162, proposes a pailey, i 163, bad condition of his men, i 163, Washington declines his proposed pailey, i 164, Vanburen receives his articles of capitulation, i 164, the articles signed, i 165, his losses, i 165, the size of his force, i 165, returns exultant to Fort Duquesne, i 167, sent by Vandreuil to harass Oswego, ii 81, defeated by Bradstreet, ii 82, 83, the French attribute a victory to, ii 83, sanitary condition of his camp, ii 90, at Niagara Bay, ii 95, captured by the English, in 90, deceives Washington in signing the articles of capitulation at Fort Necessity, in 268
- Villjoin, ii 146
- Villjoin, commandant at Isle St Jean, ii 284, on the siege of Louisbourg, ii 287
- Villeray, commandant of Fort Gaspeaux, surrenders to the English, i 262, court martialled, i 263
- Vincennes, Saint-Auge in command at, i 87
- Virginia, colony of, contrasted with New England, i 31, lower classes of, i 32, society in, i 32, slavery in, i 32, essential antagonism of New England and, i 33, strong distinctive character of, i 34, English traders in, i 40, 15, plans to invade the French domain, i 56, claims the Ohio valley, i 64, Lord Albemarle, the titular governor of, i 142, Robert Dinwiddie, the lieutenant governor of, i 142 debt due Dinwiddie from, i 142, Dinwiddie ordered by the King to repel invaders from, i 142, social

- life in, i 169, 170; England sends regiments to, i 188, Braddock in, i 203, Indian attacks on the border settlements of, ii 15, 21, refuses to support Shirley's new campaign, ii 69, withstanding under border attacks, ii 109, Washington's hopeless task in, ii 339
- Virginia Assembly, the, urged by Dinwiddie to build forts on the Ohio, i 112, votes an appropriation to defend the frontier, i 145; the Pennsylvania Assembly curiously unlike, i 172 See also Burgesses, House of
- Virginians, the, with Braddock, i 208, their gallantry in the battle of Monongahela, i 225, 238
- Virginia regiment, the, commanded by Fry, i 147; Washington assumes command of, i 157, bad influence of the regulars upon, i 157, at Fort Necessity, i 162, losses of, i 165, lack of discipline in, ii 16, in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 340, 362, 369
- Virginia traders, the, i 40, 45, 57, 63, 91
- Vitré, Denis de, iii 15
- Volontaires Étrangers, the battalion of, at Louisbourg, ii 259
- Voltaire, on the complications of political interests, i 3; his hatred of the French abuses, i 18, i 25, letter from Frédéric of Prussia to, iii 234
- Von Moltke, iii 227
- Voyagers*, i 23.
- WABASH INDIANS, the, leaguering with the Osages, i 88; ii 364
- Wabash River, the, i 43, forts on, i 44, plains of, i 59, i 191.
- Waggoner, Captain, in the battle of Monongahela, i 225, ii 16.
- Walker, Admiral, in 44.
- Walker, Dr., i 220
- Walpole, Horace, i 9, his estimate of Edward Cornwallis, i 97, 115; his estimate of the Duke of Newcastle, i 184, 185, letter from Dinwiddie to, i 184, his estimate of Mureaux, i 186; his sketch of Braddock, i 195-198, his letters to Sir Horace Mann, i 195, on Braddock's expedition, i 205; on Townshend, iii 33, on Wolfe's forebodings, iii 168, on Wolfe's victory and death, iii 168, 169; on the retreat of Lewis, iii 203, 204, on the death of George II, iii 236, 237, on Pitt's resignation, iii 244
- Ward, Fugate, at the forks of the Ohio, i 148; forced to retire by the French, i 118
- Wards, Admiral, i x
- Ward, George, iii 30
- War-feasts, Indian, description of, ii 168
- War of Independence, the, in America, i 3, 5, 37
- Warner, Samuel, on the expedition against Ticonderoga, in 79
- Warren, Admiral Sir Peter, i 298
- Washington, George, i 3, 57, sent by Dinwiddie to summon the French to leave the Ohio, holds parleys with the Indians at Logstown, i 138, at Venango, i 138, Joncaire's civility to, i 138; on the French designs on the Ohio, i 139, at Fort Le Boeuf, i 139; describes Saint-Pierre, i 139, Saint-Pierre's reception of, i 140; at Murdering Town, i 141, on the Alleghany, i 141; returns to Williamsburg, i 142; makes his report to Dinwiddie, i 142; placed in command of the militia, i 144, Dinwiddie's instructions to, i 144, second in command in Dinwiddie's expedition against the French, i 147, character of his men, i 148, Ensign Ward reports his mishap to, i 148, reports the blighting of his plans to Governor Dinwiddie, i 149; crosses the Alleghenies, i 150, at the Great Meadows, i 150, on the Youghiogany, i 151, joined by the Half-King, i 151, 152, his journal, i 152, his council with the Half-King, i 152, his victory over Jumonville, i 153, 154, conduct of his Indians, i 155, his characteristics, i 155, returns to the Great Meadows, i 156, Dinwiddie highly approves of the conduct of, i 156, builds Fort Necessity, i 156, gathers his Indians at the Great Meadows, i 157, assumes command of the Virginia regiment, i 157, his troubles with the regulars, i 157, advances to Gist's settlement, i 158, a council of war in Gist's house, i 158, returns to the Great Meadows, i 158, his unfavorable position, i 158, defends Fort Necessity against Villiers, i 162, Villiers proposes a parley, i 163, bad condition of his men, i 164; declines the proposed parley, i 164, sends Vanbraam to receive Villiers' articles of capitulation, i 164, signs the articles of capitulation, i 164, his losses, i 165, the size of his force, i 166, the Half-

King holds aloof from, i 166; the Half-King's estimate of, i 166, his immense fortitude, i 167, his defeat a heavy blow to Dinwiddie, i 168, provoked by apathy shown toward Braddock's expedition, i 204, on Braddock's ill-humor, i 209, aide-de-camp to Braddock, i 210, Braddock accepts his advice, i 214, his letter to his brother, i 214, on the spectacle of Braddock's army, i 220, in the battle of Monongahela, i 227, 228, on the defeat of Braddock, i 229, the retreat, i 232; his letter to Dinwiddie, i 237, 238, his wonderful escape, i 238, Dinwiddie's reply to, i 239, in command of the Virginia regiment, ii 16, his difficulties in enforcing discipline, ii 16, on the fugitives from the border attacks, ii 17, beset with difficulties, ii 17, receives cold support from Dinwiddie, ii 17, his protest to Dinwiddie, ii 18, 19; did not kindle enthusiasm, ii 19; the foremost man along the western border, ii 19, his letter to Morris, ii 110, falsely reported to have led the expedition against Kittanning, ii 114, his hopeless task in Virginia, ii 339, Dinwiddie conceives a dislike to, ii 339; in Forbes' expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii 342, Forbes' imputations against, ii 345, deceived in signing the articles of capitulation at Fort Necessity, ii 268

Waterbury, ii 115

Webb, Colonel Daniel, sent to America, ii 70, at Albany, ii 86; sent to reinforce Oswego, ii 93, at the Great Carrying

- Place, ii 93, receives news of the capture of Oswego by the French, ii 93; burns the fort of, ii 94, at German Flats, ii 94, ii 102, 127, on the importance of Indian assistance, ii 173, at Fort Edward, ii 181, visits Fort William Henry, ii 184, asked by Monro for reinforcements, ii 185, his indecision, ii 186; the number of his troops, ii 186, asks London for reinforcements, ii 190, warns Monro to expect no help from him, ii 191, his letter intercepted, ii 191, correspondence of, ii 202; his orders from London, ii 204, joined by Johnson at Fort Edward, ii 205, deals with a mutinous militia, ii 205, seized by the panic, ii 206, his letter to London, in 276
- Webb's regiment, on the Heights of Abraham, iii 133, 141; in the battle of Quebec, in 141, 142.
- Wedell, General, defeated by the Russians, in 233.
- Weed, Mr, ii 92.
- Weiser, Conrad, the Pennsylvanian interpreter at Onondaga, i 70 journal of, i 70, 77, on the Half-King's comments on the fight at Great Meadows, i 166, letter to Governor Morris from, ii 33.
- Wentworth, Governor, i 301, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 199; letter from Christie to, ii 206
- Wesley, i 8
- West, the, deplorable condition of French interests in, i 56; favorable outlook for the English in, i 62, French posts in, i 200, French posts and settlements in, ii 4.
- West, Benjamin, the painter, ii 368, 369
- West, Captain ii 168
- Westborough Mass, ii 295
- 'Western, June,' i 9
- Western tribes, the, set on by Dumas to attack the border settlements, ii 14, join the French to recover Pittsburg, iii 86, refuse to fight, iii 207
- West Indies, the, French possessions in, i 12, i 142, using French colonies in, ii 42, iii 33, 247, 252, 286
- Westminster Abbey, ii 298.
- West Mountain, i 311.
- Wheeling Creek, Bienville at, i 51
- Whig aristocracy, the, in England, does a priceless service to English liberty, i 8
- Whipping post, the, in camp, ii 326.
- Whitefield, i 8
- Whitehall, town of, Dieskau at, i 309; ii 329, iii 95.
- White Mountains, the, ii 141.
- White Point, ii 262, 263
- White's Chocolate House, i 9.
- White Woman's Creek, i 58
- Whiting, Lieutenant-Colonel, i 313, in Dieskau's ambush, i 314.
- Whitmore, Brigadier, ii 253; made governor of Louisbourg, ii 281
- Whitworth, Doctor, at Fort Edward, i 281.
- Whitworth, Miles, on the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii 197, 202, iii 278, 279.
- Wiggins, George, ii 288.

- Wilhelmina, sister of Frederic of Prussia death of, ii 233.
- William III, of England, i 7
- William and Mary College, i 169
- William of Orange, i 8
- William Henry, Fox, i 327, ii 36, 75, Colonel Jonathan Paglev in command at, ii 76, description of the camp at, ii 89, the English at, ii 115, 116, 121, 122, 125, Major Eyre takes possession of, ii 127, Rogers at ii 129, ii 133, St Patrick's Day celebrated at, ii 134, Vandrenil's expedition against, ii 135, strength of the garrison at, ii 136, attacked by Rigand, ii 136-139, ii 140, 165, 181, ruins of, ii 182 description of, ii 184, Lieutenant-Colonel Monro in command, ii 184, summoned by Montreal to surrender, ii 187, refuses, ii 187, the attack, ii 188, the capitulation ii 191, the wounded butchered by the Indians, ii 194, the massacre, ii 195-202, destruction of, ii 202, the responsibility for the signal of butchery at, ii 203, ii 294, Colonel Cummings in command at, ii 321, iii 7, 79, 91, 165, 228, testimony on the attack on, iii 276-279
- Williams College, founded by Ephraim Williams, i 302
- Williams, Colonel Ephraim, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 301; founds Williams College, i 302, on the character of the provincial army, i 303, impatient at the delays, i 304, letter to Dwight from, i 305; at the Drowned Lands, i 313, death of, i 314, 322
- Williams, Fort, built by the English on the Mohawk, ii 61, 62
- Williams, Colonel Israel, letter from Ephraim Williams to, i 303, letter from Pomeroy to, i 304; papers of, i 328, letters from Dr Thomas Williams to, ii 89-93, letters from Colonel William Williams to, ii 94, 321, 327
- Williams, Josiah, wounded in the battle of Lake George, i 322
- Williams' regiment, in the battle of Lake George, i 318
- Williams, Stephen, chaplain, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302; at Fort Lyman, i 307
- Williams, Thomas, surgeon, in Shirley's expedition against Crown Point, i 302, impatient at the delays, i 304, 305, on the battle of Lake George, i 317, letter to his wife, i 322, on the English losses in the battle of Lake George, i 323, 324, letters of, i 328, on the condition of the provincial camps, ii 89, anxious about Oswego, ii 93, on the capture of Oswego by the French, ii 94, on the exploits of Robert Rogers, ii 124.
- Williams, Mrs Thomas, letters from her husband to, i 322, ii 94
- Williams, Colonel William, letters from Marsh to, i 316, 322, his letters to Colonel Israel Williams, ii 94, 321, 327
- Williamsburg, i 139, Washington at, i 142, i 147, description of, i 169, Dinwiddie at, i 237
- Will's Creek, trading-house built

- by the Ohio Company at, i. 63, 138, Dinwiddie appoints a rendezvous at, i. 144, Washington at, i. 148, 150, Fry at, i. 156, 157, Braddock at, i. 203, 207
- Wilson, Commissary, on the expedition against Ticonderoga, iii. 79, iii. 94
- Winchester, Dinwiddie invites the Indians to meet him at, i. 146, Washington's headquarters at, ii. 16
- Windsor, town of, i. 98, 278, ii. 288.
- Winnebagoes, the, at Montcalm's grand council, ii. 174
- Winslow, Lieutenant-Colonel John, sent to the Kennebec by Shirley, i. 175, commissioned by Shirley to raise volunteers against the French, i. 251, sketch of, i. 255; in the luckless attack on Carthagenia, i. 255, forms a regiment, i. 255, in the attack on Fort Beauséjour, i. 258; letter from Captain Rous to, i. 259, journal of, i. 262; takes possession of Fort Gaspereau, i. 262; at Beauséjour, i. 263; Monckton informs him of his intention to remove the Acadians, i. 263; on Monckton's interview with the Acadians, i. 264, on the oath required of the Acadians, i. 275, ordered to seize the Acadians, i. 276, sets out from Fort Cumberland on his unenviable errand, i. 277; angered by Monckton's treatment, i. 277; at Grand Pré, i. 278, 279; his instructions from Lawrence, i. 279, 280; issues a summons to the Acadians, i. 281, the scene in the church, i. 282, 283, his portrait, i. 283, his anxiety for his captives, i. 286, a measure of precaution, i. 287, his grief, i. 288; congratulated by Murray, i. 288, heartsick, i. 289; arrival of the transports, i. 289, the embarkation, i. 289, his humane treatment of the Acadians, i. 290, commands the New England troops, ii. 69, letter from Lord London to, ii. 74; his headquarters at Half-Moon, ii. 75, letter from Colonel Fitch to, ii. 75, urges haste in the preparations against Ticonderoga, ii. 76; his meeting with London, ii. 87, at Lake George, ii. 88, 108, ii. 92, faced by Montcalm at Ticonderoga, ii. 108, 109; his estimate of Israel Putnam, ii. 115, his "Letter Book," ii. 116; on Lydians, ii. 122; ordered to keep the defensive, ii. 126; his letter to Shirley, ii. 126, his letter to Halifax, ii. 127; ii. 183; cost to Massachusetts of the expedition of, ii. 290
- Winslow's battalion, i. 285.
- Wolfe, Major-General Edward (father), iii. 24
- Wolfe, Mrs Edward (mother), letters from her son to, iii. 25, 27, 28, 29, 32, 112
- Wolfe, Brigadier James, on Edward Cornwallis, i. 97, praises the conduct of Bradstreet, ii. 83, shows gallantry at Rochefort, ii. 253; iii. 29; reconnoitres at Louisbourg, ii. 262; an habitual invalid, ii. 263; attempts to land at Freshwater Cove, ii. 264; a bold movement, ii. 265; at Lighthouse Point, ii.

267, silences the Island Battery, in 269, seizes Gallows Hill, in 271, the life of the siege of Louisbourg, in 284, his discontent, in 285, executes an unpleasant duty, in 286, sails for England, in 287, his correspondence on the siege of Louisbourg, in 288, his estimate of Abercrombie, in 295, his estimate of Howe, in 295, his expedition to the St Lawrence, in 22, in 24, personal appearance of, in 24, his early life, in 25, letters to his mother, in 25, 27, 28, 29, 32, his martial instincts, in 26, his character, in 27, his domestic life, in 28, letters to his uncle, in 30, 31, 33, his betrothal, in 30, letter to Rickson from, in 31, named by Pitt to lead the expedition against Quebec, in 31, a hopeless enigma to Newcastle, in 31, George II's opinion of, in 31, sails to America, in 32, his colleagues, in 33, anecdote of, in 35, his force at Quebec, in 43, lands on the Island of Orleans, in 49, magnitude of his undertaking, in 49, a desperate game, in 51, the elements against him, in 51, strength of his position, in 54, seizes Point Levi, in 55, seeks to strike an effective blow, in 57, occupies the heights of Montmorenci, in 60, danger of his position, in 61, red and white savages, in 63, forbids scalping, in 63, his proclamation to the Canadians, in 65, becomes more vulnerable than ever, in 66, his severities, in 67, his desperate plan, in 70, attacks the French camp, in 71, orders a retreat, in 74, on the repulse at Montmorenci, in 76, in 77, Amherst's delay in reinforcing, in 82, 83, letter from Amherst to, in 93, deeply moved by the disaster at the heights of Montmorenci, in 102, rebukes the grenadiers, in 102, despondency of, in 103, his plan to fortify Isle aux-Coudres, in 103, his waste the parishes, in 104, 105, his humane orders, in 105, illness of, in 109, a new plan of attack, in 110, determination of, in 111, his last letter to his mother, in 112, his last despatches, in 113, his letter to Haldimess, in 114, 115, his desperate situation, in 115, his plan, in 116, his movements, in 117, immense moral force of, in 121, deceives Bougainville in 122, his last general orders, in 123, loyalty of the army to, in 124, a pretended attack, in 125, his force compared with Montcalm's, in 125, the troops embark, in 127, his presentiment of death, in 127, the descent of the St Lawrence, in 129, passes the sentries, in 130; makes the ascent, in 130, 131, the line of battle, in 133, his omnipresence, in 138, an anecdote of, in 138, the crisis, in 139, the battle, in 139; mortally wounded, in 140, his death, in 141, his remains carried to England, in 162, effect of the news in England of his victory and death, in 168, 169, the far-reaching consequence of his victory, in 170, in 192, 193, 198,

- 225, 255, his force at Quebec, iii 280
- Wolfe, Major Walter (uncle), letters from Wolfe to, iii 30, 31, 33
- Wolfe's Cove, iii. 121.
- Woll Island, ii 96
- Women, prodigious influence in France of, i 14
- Wood Creek, of Lake Champlain, i 305, 306, 308; ii 75, 80, 93, 328, 329, Shirley at, ii 7, Fort Bull built on, ii 61
- "Wooden horse," the, in camp, ii. 326
- Woodhull, Colonel Nathaniel, on the capture of Fort Lévis, iii 216
- Woolsey, Colonel, on the battle of Ticonderoga, iii 280, 281
- Woolster, Colonel David, at Fort Edward, ii 76
- Worcester (Mass), ii. 91.
- Wrayall, Johnson's secretary, on Johnson's army, i 312, eulogizes Johnson, i. 327.
- Wright, ii 288, 295; on Wolfe, iii 34, 138
- Wright, Dr, ii 327
- Wyandot, Indian village of, i 81
- Wyandots, the, in the Ohio valley, i 43, 45; village of, i. 57; i. 61.
- Wynne, on the battle of Ste-Foy, iii 205
- Wyoming, ii 352.
- Yadkin River, the, i 62.
- Yale College, i 301, 302.
- York, i 9, 207
- Youghiogany River, the, Washington on, i 151, ii 346.
- Young, Lieutenant-Colonel, sent to Fort William Henry, ii 185, sent to Montcalm to capitulate, ii 193
- ZINSBERGER, David, i 58.
- Zinsendorf, Count, the Moravian, on Andrew Montour, i 58, journal of, i 58

